Explanatory memorandum

The International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (International IDEA, or the Institute) is an international intergovernmental organization, based in Stockholm, Sweden, which was established by the Agreement Establishing the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance, concluded in Stockholm on 27 February 1995 by 14 founding member States. It currently has 19 member States (as at 30 June 2000)^a as well as a non-member State contributor, with outstanding membership applications by several States. Its overall mandate is to promote sustainable democracy and assist democratization worldwide.

More concretely, the objectives of the International IDEA are as follows:

- To promote and advance sustainable democracy worldwide;
- To broaden the understanding and promote the implementation and dissemination of the norms, rules and guidelines that apply to multiparty pluralism and democratic processes;
- To strengthen and support national capacity to develop a full range of democratic instruments;
- To provide a meeting place for exchanges between all those involved in electoral processes in the context of democratic institution-building;
- To increase knowledge and enhance learning about democratic electoral processes;
- To promote transparency and accountability, professionalism and efficiency in the electoral process in the context of democratic development.

Within the broad mandate, the International IDEA currently has four pillars of activities: a rules and guidelines programme, which aims at standard-setting for democratic practices; a capacity-building programme, which aims at building democratic capacities in selected countries or regions; an applied research programme, which aims at bridging the gap between academia and practitioners by providing meeting places as well as practical research activities within its sphere of competence; and information services on democracy-related issues. In all its activities, the International IDEA adopts a non-prescriptive approach to democracy promotion and democratization assistance, and therefore chooses to provide options for democratization rather than a predetermined solution. The work of the International IDEA is supported by an international secretariat composed of some 60 staff members, recruited internationally.

The Institute's organs consist of the Council, the Nominating Committee, the Board of Directors, the Secretary-General and the Secretariat. The governing Council gives the overall direction of the Institute's work, reviews the activities of the Institute, and appoints the members of the Board of Directors and the Nominating Committee. The Board of Directors, appointed by the Council, consists of between 9 and 15 members, serving in their personal capacities, who are selected on the basis of accomplishment in the fields of law, electoral techniques and politics and in the relevant areas of academia. The Board of Directors develops the policies of the Institute on the basis of the overall direction given by the Council and appoints the Secretary-General. The Nominating Committee, appointed by the Council, nominates distinguished personalities to serve as members of the Board of Directors for appointment by the Council.

One important feature of the International IDEA's work method in democratization assistance is its partnership with other international organizations, as democratization is closely linked to promotion of other substantive policy issues, as human rights, conflict management, sustainable development, representativeness and inclusiveness and transparency. In this context, the Institute currently has memoranda of understanding or cooperation agreements with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the International Commission of Jurists, the Inter-American Development Bank, and the Organisation Internationale de la Francophonie. The International IDEA also works closely with other international or regional organizations, such as various parts of the United Nations (in particular with the Electoral Assistance Division), the World Bank, the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the European Union (EU). Given the importance of working with civil society, currently five international nongovernmental organizations, which have met the approval of the Council, are also associated with the Institute.

In the coming years, the International IDEA will continue to focus in its work programme on several key themes, such as democracy and conflict management, the relationship between democratization, sustainable development and poverty eradication and the right to democracy as a human right. It will also continue to have substantive capacity-building activities in selected countries. In all those work areas, it is believed that an increased cooperation with the United Nations would be crucial. While the International IDEA has already been working with the United Nations through various arrangements, it considers it desirable to consolidate and strengthen links between the United Nations, and that an observer status in the General Assembly would be mutually beneficial. Consequently, pursuant to a decision taken by its Council and the Board of Directors, the International IDEA requests that it be granted observer status in the General Assembly.

Notes

^a Uruguay, which joined the Institute in May 2000, currently attends the International IDEA Council meeting as a non-voting observer as it awaits parliamentary ratification of the Agreement.
