I. Organizational and other matters

A. States parties to the Convention

- 1. As at 29 January 2016, the closing date of the seventy-first session of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, there were 196 States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 3 more than at the time of the last report (Somalia, South Sudan and the State of Palestine). This makes it the most widely ratified human rights instrument, with only one ratification left to reach universal ratification, namely that of United States of America. An updated list of States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention can be consulted at www.ohchr.org or http://treaties.un.org.
- 2. As at the same date, the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict had been ratified or acceded to by 162 States parties, 9 more than at the time of the last report, and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography had been ratified or acceded to by 171 States parties, 5 more than at the time of the last report.
- 3. The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure, adopted by the General Assembly on 19 December 2011, entered into force on 14 April 2014, three months after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession, in accordance with article 19 (1) of the Optional Protocol. As at 29 January 2016, it had been ratified by 24 States, 14 more than the time of the last report. An updated list of States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the three Optional Protocols can be consulted at www.ohchr.org or http://treaties.un.org.

B. Sessions of the Committee

4. The Committee held six sessions since the adoption of its previous biennial report: the sixty-sixth session (26 May-13 June 2014), sixty-seventh session (1-19 September 2014), sixty-eighth session (12-30 January 2015), sixty-ninth session (18 May-5 June 2015), seventieth session (14 September-2 October 2015) and seventy-first session (11-29 January 2016). Subsequent to each session, the Committee makes public all concluding observations adopted, as well as any decisions and recommendations (including those arising from a day of general discussion) and general comments adopted. The full text of those documents can be found at www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CRC/Pages/CRC Index.aspx.

C. Membership and officers of the Committee

- 5. From the sixty-sixth to the sixty-eighth session, the Committee maintained the same members and officers noted in its previous report to the General Assembly, with Kirsten Sandberg as the Chair.<sup>2</sup>
- 6. In accordance with article 43 of the Convention, the Fifteenth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention was convened on 25 June 2014 at United Nations Headquarters.

D. Adoption of the report

8. At its 2103rd meeting, held on 29 January 2016, the Committee considered the draft of its thirteenth biennial report to the General Assembly, covering its activities from the sixty-sixth to the seventy-first session. The report was adopted unanimously by the Committee.

C. Progress achieved: trends and challenges of the implementation process

16. In accordance with its practice regarding its biennial reports, in the present section the Committee assesses achievements and challenges as well as current trends in children's rights. In particular, the Committee dedicates a subsection to public budgets to realize the rights of the child.

1. Progress achieved in general

17. During the period under review, the Committee on the Rights of the Child considered at six sessions a total of 83 reports under the Convention and the first two

Optional Protocols, 17 more than in the previous reporting period. In addition, it issued the first general comment jointly with another Committee (see para. 47 below). It also adopted its first decision on a communication under the Optional Protocol on a communications procedure.

- 18. On 24 September 2014, the Committee celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Convention as an online event with conversations between 28 children from 14 countries around the world and Committee members. The video sessions, as well as the short stories, poems, pictures, photos and videos sent by children to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary, may be viewed at www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CRC/Pages/CRC25thAnniversary.aspx.
- 19. Between sessions, the Committee members were personally engaged in numerous activities. Those included participating in several meetings, conferences, seminars, lectures and courses. From 12 to 14 November 2014, the majority of the members of the Committee attended the Sixth World Congress on the Rights of Children and Adolescents in Puebla, Mexico. Additionally, many Committee members were involved in the follow-up to the concluding observations of the Committee in a number of countries upon invitation from States, civil society organizations and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). That work remains indispensable to guarantee a better application of the Convention and the three Optional Protocols thereto.
- 20. The Committee continued its work on the process initiated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in 2009 on strengthening the treaty body system. At its sixty-sixth session, the Committee discussed the outcome of the treaty body strengthening process as adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/268 on strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system in April 2014 and its implications for the Committee. In that regard, the Committee adopted at its 1928th meeting its decision No. 11 with regard to the simplified reporting procedure, the length of concluding observations and the appointment of a rapporteur on reprisals (for the full text of the decision, see annex II to the present report). In subsequent sessions, the Committee discussed how to offer the simplified reporting procedure to States parties in 2016, as stated in Committee's decision No. 11, and methods of work concerning days of general discussion and general comments.

2. Public budgets to realize the rights of the child

- 21. Over recent years, the Committee has noticed during the dialogue with States parties important progress made by State parties in reviewing domestic legislation, policies and programmes and bringing them into conformity with the provisions of the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto. At the same time the Committee has underlined that the legislation, policies and programmes cannot be realized without sufficient financial resources mobilized and spent in an effective, efficient, equitable, transparent and sustainable way. Regrettably, more needs to be done by States, as emphasized by the Committee in almost all its dialogues with States parties, as well as in its concluding observations.
- 22. Likewise, the Committee repeatedly expressed its concern over the serious consequences on children's rights of the budgetary measures adopted in times of economic crisis.
- 23. For the above-mentioned reasons, the Committee decided to develop a general comment on the budgeting process, with a special focus on public spending. The overall objective of adopting the general comment is to improve understanding of the obligations deriving from the Convention in relation to budgeting for the rights of the child. The specific objective is to promote real change in the way budgets are planned for, enacted, executed and followed up on in order to better implement the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto.

- 24. The Committee undertook broad consultations in developing the general comment, including with representatives of the States parties to the Convention, other human rights treaty bodies and non-governmental organizations and human rights special procedure mandate holders working on children's rights and individual experts. At the same time, meetings and regional consultations were carried out in Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East and North Africa and sub-Saharan Africa. Last, but not least, a global consultation was organized, with 2,693 children from 71 different countries contributing. Additionally, children of different backgrounds also attended regional consultations in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America.
- 25. The Committee is of the view that public resource mobilization and spending to realize the rights of the child must simultaneously respect the general principles of the Convention (the right to non-discrimination; the best interest of the child; the right to life, survival and development; the right to be heard) and the principles of public budgeting (effectiveness, efficiency, equity, transparency and sustainability). Budgets should thus ensure budgetary rigour, together with providing the content of all the rights recognized in the Convention.
- 26. The Committee is of the opinion that particular attention should be given to situations of economic crisis, in which States are often obliged to adopt measures to cut expenditure. States must, in those circumstances, take into consideration in particular the right of children to have their best interests taken into account as a primary consideration in the budgetary measures that concern them. Similarly, States should take measures to ensure, in any case, the essential implementation of all rights for all children, in particular those who are in a situation of particular vulnerability.
- 27. The expression "to the maximum extent of their available resources" as used in the Convention to refer to the content of the budgetary obligations in the field of economic, social and cultural rights, should lead States to take measures, if necessary also in the framework of international cooperation, to ensure the availability of sufficient and sustainable resources to guarantee those rights. In that regard, not only public spending, but also the resource mobilization systems, should take into account the obligations arising from the Convention.
- 28. While recognizing that the details of budget processes differ between States and that certain States have developed their own tailor-made child rights budgeting methods, the general comment provides some key points of guidance regarding four major stages of the budget process that concern all States: planning, enactment, execution and follow-up.
- 29. In drafting the general comment, the Committee realized that it must make very specific recommendations that allow all States to improve the way in which they plan, approve, execute and monitor their public budgets. That would guarantee all the rights of all children, with special attention given to children who are in situations of vulnerability. The Committee's intention with the general comment, therefore, is not just to make children visible in the texts setting out budgets, by being able to identify with precision which is the specific budget allocated to the guarantee of each of the rights contained in the Convention, but that children are visible throughout the budgetary process, with children and their rights present in the planning, enactment, execution and monitoring of all public budgets.
- 30. The Committee plans to approve the general comment in the course of 2016.

3. Trends and challenges

- 31. The Committee notes that, since the adoption of the Convention, the twenty-fifth anniversary of which was celebrated in 2014, the world in general has become a better place for children. The underlying values of the Convention, although tested on some occasions, are hardly questioned. Commitments to children in the areas of poverty, nutrition, health, education, water and sanitation and gender equality contained in the Millennium Development Goals have had a positive impact on millions of children, especially in the health and education sectors. The Committee welcomes the adoption on 25 September 2015 of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, which includes new goals and targets on child protection, early childhood education and reducing inequality. The Committee hopes that the Agenda will help States to implement further the provisions of the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto.
- 32. Notwithstanding the improvements, too many children everywhere in the world are still facing significant challenges because their rights are not respected and, sometimes, are openly violated. Discrimination, both de jure and de facto, against children, such as girls, children with disabilities, children from ethnic, racial and religious minorities, children in poverty, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex children and non-national and stateless children, remains a serious challenge. Violence against children, in all its forms, continues to be widespread, including sexual and other forms of exploitation. In that regard, the Committee reiterates the recommendations made in its previous report.<sup>3</sup>
- 33. It also expresses its grave concern about the continued wide prevalence of harmful practices against children that are grounded in discrimination, including based on sex, gender and age, and have often been justified by invoking sociocultural and religious customs and values, in addition to misconceptions relating to some groups of children in disadvantaged situations, especially girls. The most prevalent and well-documented practices are female genital mutilation, child and forced marriage, crimes committed in the name of so-called honour and dowry-related violence. In a joint general comment No. 18 on harmful practices, adopted together with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on harmful practices, the Committee, for an effective prevention and elimination of harmful practices, recommended that States parties establish a well-defined, rights-based and locally relevant holistic strategy that includes supportive legal and policy measures, including social measures that are combined with commensurate political commitment and accountability at all levels.
- 34. The Committee reiterates its recommendations made with regard to other challenges highlighted in its previous report, in particular relating to children with disabilities and juvenile justice. The Committee in particular notes with concern that, during the reporting period (1 February 2014-29 January 2016), a number of States parties introduced bills and laws that do not advance the object and purposes of the Convention, often reducing the minimum age of criminal responsibility below an internationally acceptable standard, imposing harsh penalties on children and not providing adequate substantive or procedural protection to all children below 18 years. Those trends are a very serious regression and cause for concern for the Committee.
- 35. The Committee is particularly worried by the worsening of the migration crisis during the reporting period and its negative impact on the rights of millions of children worldwide, including their right to life, survival and development. It is imperative that

States parties adopt a child rights-based approach when planning, discussing and implementing measures designed to strengthen responses to migration. The right of the child to have his or her best interests taken as a primary consideration should serve as the underlying obligation with which all migration laws, policies and services in countries of origin, transit and destination must comply. In addition, the obligation to respect and protect the right of the child to freedom from all forms of violence — physical or mental, intentional or non-intentional — needs to be upheld by all governments and their branches in all contexts, including migration. Children and their families escaping from a situation of war and seeking refugee status should receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance in accordance with article 22 of the Convention and other relevant international human rights, as well as international humanitarian law.

- 36. The Committee is also concerned by the increasing use of detention of immigrant children and, in that regard, strongly urges all States parties to end that practice, which has negative impacts on the rights of children, including to health and education. It is further concerned at reports that, in 2015, thousands of unaccompanied children disappeared in Europe after registering with State authorities and may face greater risks of, inter alia, sexual exploitation and abuse. The Committee recommends that States parties should take appropriate measures to prevent such cases, including by ensuring that unaccompanied and separated children are properly identified; regularly inquiring as to their whereabouts; and conducting information campaigns that are age-appropriate, gender-sensitive and in a language and medium that can be understood by the child.
- It is important to continue to integrate a child rights-based approach into the planning and implementation of child health policies, programmes and laws, including by applying the technical guidance on the application of a human rights-based approach to the implementation of policies and programmes to reduce and eliminate preventable mortality and morbidity of children under 5 years of age (A/HRC/27/31). While there is some notable progress in the field of health, such as immunization coverage, and reduction of malnutrition, progress is sometimes uneven, inadequate or confronted with emerging issues. For instance, while immunization reportedly averts between 2 and 3 million deaths annually, an additional 1.5 million deaths could be averted if global immunization coverage improved. A large number of adolescents who suffer from mental health disorders, poor nutrition, substance abuse, HIV/AIDS and chronic illness lack access to critical prevention and care services. Recent health emergencies such as Ebola and the Zika virus, as well as environment-related causes and conditions, including exposure to environmental toxicants and air pollution, have continued to negatively affect the right to life, survival and development of children. Climate change is already having a negative impact on the wellbeing of millions of children, in particular owing to droughts, floods and severe weather events.
- 38. The need to ensure the full application of the provisions of the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto to the digital environment and provide all stakeholders with important guidance for the realization of children's rights online is an even more pressing issue today than before. In particular, sexual exploitation online, which can take many forms, including the creation, publication and distribution of sexual abuse material (child pornography) continues to pose serious challenges for the protection of children. Among other issues, the lack of systematic implementation of the necessary legislation and subsequent action at the national level, forms of Internet governance that continue to prove somewhat fragile and uneven and the fact that the Internet is largely blind to age seem to compound the problem.
- 39. The Committee is concerned about the low pace of ratification of and accession to, as well as reporting under, the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict and the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. During the reporting period, only nine States ratified or acceded to the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict and five States ratified/acceded to the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. It is a serious cause of concern for the Committee that 70 initial reports are still overdue for the Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and more than 50 for the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict. With respect to the Optional Protocol on a communications procedure, which entered into force in April 2014, the Committee notes that, despite the number of signatures standing at 50, the number of ratifications and accessions remains at 24.

III. Activities carried out under the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure

40. Article 16 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure provides that the Committee shall include in its report submitted every two years to the General Assembly a summary of its activities carried out under this Optional Protocol.

A. Action taken by the Committee in respect of issues arising under article 5 of the Optional Protocol

41. The Committee started receiving its first individual communications under article 5 of the Optional Protocol. At its sixty-ninth session, the Committee adopted by consensus an inadmissibility decision on communication No. 1/2014 (A.H.A. v. Spain). The decision is available through the Official Document System of the United Nations (http://documents.un.org/) under the symbol CRC/C/69/D/1/2014.

B. Action taken by the Committee in respect of issues arising under article 13 of the Optional Protocol

42. Since the entry into force of the Optional Protocol, the Committee has received two requests for inquiry. In relation to the submission received on 17 September 2015 and registered as No. 2015/1, the Committee was informed that an additional submission will be received from the source of information and hence its consideration has been postponed. In relation to the request for inquiry received on 12 November 2015 and registered as No. 2015/2, in January 2016, at its seventy-first session, the Committee took a decision to discontinue the request. The decision was transmitted to the source of information.

- 3. Appoint a member of the Committee as rapporteur on reprisals to deal with allegations of reprisals against individuals and groups on the basis of their cooperation with the Committee.

[Adopted on 19 September 2014]

Annex III

Recommendations from the 2014 day of general discussion on children's rights and digital media

1. In the light of the objective for the day of general discussion of it being a forum for raising awareness about, and discussing, children's rights in order to identify issues for States to take account of in their policies and programmes, as well as to provide guidance to other relevant actors on the respect, promotion and fulfilment of children's rights in the context of digital media, the Committee issues the following recommendations. The recommendations below, while addressed to the primary duty bearers — States — also require the active engagement and participation of other stakeholders, including families, schools, civil society and the private sector.

General recommendations, including legislation, policies and coordination

- 2. States should recognize the importance of access to, and use of, digital media and information and communications technologies for children and their potential to promote all children's rights, in particular the rights to freedom of expression, access to appropriate information, participation and education, as well as rest, leisure, play, recreational activities, cultural life and the arts. In addition, States should ensure that equal and safe access to digital media and information and communications technologies, including the Internet, is integrated in the post-2015 development agenda.
- 3. States should adopt and effectively implement comprehensive human rights-based laws and policies which integrate children's access to digital media and information and communications technologies and ensure the full protection under the Convention and its Optional Protocols when using digital media and information and communications technologies. In the light of the evolving nature of the issue, States should also ensure regular monitoring of implementation and assessment of legislation and policies.
- 4. States are called upon to promote and facilitate regular public debates and the active involvement of all stakeholders, in particular children, parents and other caretakers, professionals working with or for children, including in the educational field, civil society and information and communications technology and other relevant industries, before adopting draft laws, policies, strategies and programmes and when setting up services for child victims. It is furthermore recommended that States effectively evaluate the impact of digital media and information and communications technology-related policies, programmes, practices and decisions on the rights, well-being and development of all children. States should thereby ensure that the fundamental principles of the Convention, including the right to non-discrimination, the right to have the child's best interests taken as a primary consideration, the right to life, survival and development and children's right to express their views in matters affecting them, are effectively prioritized and meaningfully implemented.
- 5. States should adopt a national coordinating framework with a clear mandate and sufficient authority to coordinate all activities related to children's rights and digital media and information and communications technologies at cross-sectoral, national, regional and local levels and facilitate international cooperation. States should also ensure that said coordinating body is provided with the necessary human, technical and financial resources for its effective operation.

Data collection and research, monitoring and evaluation of efforts

- 6. States should undertake research, data collection and analysis on an ongoing basis to better understand how children access and use digital and social media, as well as their impact on children's lives. The data should cover both risks and opportunities for children and should be disaggregated by age, sex, geographic location, socioeconomic background, disability, membership of a minority and/or indigenous group, ethnic origin or any other category considered appropriate in order to facilitate analysis of the situation of all children, particularly those in situations of vulnerability.
- 7. The Committee recommends that the data be used for establishing baselines against which progress can be measured, for the formulation and evaluation of relevant laws, policies, programmes and projects and for the monitoring of their implementation. States should also ensure safeguards for guaranteeing that these data are not used by authorities to encourage censorship or any other political and economic interference.
- 8. The Committee furthermore recommends that States promote the exchange and sharing of ideas, information, experiences and good practices, including through the creation of platforms, with all stakeholders, especially children, at the national, regional and international level.

Independent monitoring

9. States should empower and provide adequate resources to national institutions responsible for guaranteeing human rights (such as national human rights institutions, ombudspersons or equality bodies) to allow them to play a key role in monitoring compliance with the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto. Such an institution should have a specific mandate to address the rights of children in relation to digital media and information and communications technologies, and be able to receive, investigate and address complaints by children in a child-sensitive manner, ensure the privacy and protection of victims, and undertake monitoring, follow-up and verification activities for child victims.

Cooperation with civil society

10. The Committee recognizes the important role played by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in ensuring access of children to information and communications technologies and digital media and protecting their rights when using these means. It recommends that States systematically involve all NGOs working in the field of digital media and children's rights in the development, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of relevant laws, policies and programmes, as well as in research and data collection.

Awareness-raising and training

- 11. The Committee recommends that States carry out age appropriate awareness-raising programmes to sensitize the public in general and children in particular to opportunities and risks, including unintended consequences of self-generated content, relating to the use of information and communications technologies and digital media. States should distribute relevant information material tailored specifically to children, and tailored to specific agegroups, as well as to parents and other caregivers, and all professionals working with or for children, and seek close cooperation with civil society in the organization and implementation of awareness-raising programmes.
- 12. The Committee further recommends that States provide adequate training and support for children to ensure the development of their digital and social literacy skills with a view to enhancing a responsible use of digital media and information and communications technologies, as well as their capacity to avoid risks and protect themselves from harm. States should also provide adequate training and support to parents and other caregivers, as well as professionals working with and for children including in the educational field, to enhance their technical skills, inform them about risks and potential harm, learn about how children use technology and be able to support children in using digital media and information and communications technologies in a responsible and safe manner.

Children's rights and the business sector

- 13. In the light of the Committee's general comment No. 16 (2013) on State obligations regarding the impact of the business sector on children's rights, as well as other international norms and standards in that area, States should ensure a clear and predictable legal and regulatory environment that requires information and communications technologies and other relevant industries operating in the State party to respect children's rights. States should also establish monitoring mechanisms for the investigation and redress of children's rights violations, with a view to improving accountability of information and communications technology and other relevant companies, as well as strengthen regulatory agencies' responsibility for the development of standards relevant to children's rights and information and communications technologies.
- 14. The Committee recommends that States require businesses to undertake child-rights due diligence with a view to identifying, preventing and mitigating their impact on children's rights when using digital media and information and communications technologies. Moreover, States should encourage and facilitate the development of voluntary, self-regulatory, professional and ethical guidelines and standards of conduct and other initiatives, such as the development of technical solutions promoting online safety and the adoption of child-friendly terms and conditions for the use of information and communications technologies and digital media, as well as developing age-appropriate content, by information and communications technology and other relevant industries to ensure that their practices are in full compliance with the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto and other international human rights norms and standards. In addition, it is recommended that States ensure space for discussion and cooperation with information and communications technology and other relevant industry.

Non-discrimination

- 15. States should ensure that all children within their jurisdiction, in particular girls, children with disabilities, children living in remote areas, children living in poverty, children belonging to minorities, indigenous children, children living in street situations, children living in institutions and other children in vulnerable and marginalized situations, have access to digital media and information and communications technologies without discrimination. In particular, the Committee recommends that States inter alia:
- (a) Take measures to improve the coverage of Internet infrastructure to include rural communities;
- (b) Promote inclusive accessibility to digital media and information and communications technologies and affordable design of technology and digital content, taking into consideration age, and ensure that intellectual property rights do not constitute an unreasonable or discriminatory barrier to access by children to cultural materials, in particular children with disabilities and children belonging to minorities or indigenous groups;
  - (c) Promote linguistic and cultural diversity of digital content;

- (d) Intensify efforts to ensure the effective elimination of all forms of discrimination against girls and address gender stereotypes and social norms that limit girls' access and use of technology, including through awareness-raising programmes;
- (e) Provide assistance to schools and communities to cover the costs of computer equipment and connectivity and promote the development of low-cost technical solutions;
- (f) Include in non-discrimination laws, policies, strategies and programmes aspects dealing with access for children to digital media and information and communications technologies, in particular children belonging to most vulnerable and disadvantaged groups. In that regard, the Committee recommends that States seek technical cooperation from, among others, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Telecommunications Union and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Respect for the views of the child

16. States should ensure that children are consulted in order to take into account their views and experiences in developing laws, policies and programmes and in the setting up of services, and other measures relating to digital media and information and communications technologies. That should include girls as well as boys, and children in vulnerable or marginalized situations. Children should also be actively engaged in the design and implementation of initiatives aimed at fostering safe use of digital media and information and communications technologies, including online safety. In particular, States are encouraged to establish online spaces, where children can express their views and opinions in a responsible and safe manner.

Rights to freedom of expression, access to appropriate information, freedom of association and peaceful assembly

- 17. The Committee calls upon States to revise their national laws, regulations and policies that limit children's rights to freedom of expression, access to appropriate information as well as association and peaceful assembly in any setting, including the online environment, to align them with the Convention and other international human rights norms and standards.
- 18. States should furthermore actively promote children's rights to freedom of expression, access to appropriate information and association and peaceful assembly in all settings, including the online environment. In particular, States should promote the creation of channels for child-led activism, as well as educational and recreational content for children of different ages, including content produced by children themselves.

Right to privacy

- 19. States should guarantee the protection of children's rights to privacy in relation to digital media and information and communications technologies and develop effective safeguards against abuse without unduly restricting the full enjoyment of their rights laid down under the Convention. States should also develop and strengthen awareness-raising programmes for children on privacy risks related to the use of digital media and information and communications technologies and regarding self-generated content.
- 20. The Committee moreover recommends that States ensure that all children have meaningful and child-friendly information about how their data is being gathered, stored, used and potentially shared with others. In this regard, States should ensure that age-appropriate privacy settings, with clear information and warnings, are available for children using digital media and information and communications technologies.

Access to appropriate information

21. States should encourage the mass media, including private media, to disseminate information and materials of social and cultural benefit to the child, for example regarding healthy lifestyles.

Protection against harm, including violence, exploitation and abuse of children

- 22. States should address the risks posed by digital media and information and communications technologies to the safety of children, including online harassment, sexual exploitation of children, access to violent and sexual content, grooming and self-generated sexual content, through holistic strategies that ensure the full enjoyment of their rights laid down under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto. States should thereby always ensure a balance between promoting the opportunities provided by digital media and information and communications technologies, and protecting children from harm. In particular, States should:
- (a) Develop and strengthen programmes aimed at preventing harm and tackling risks posed by digital media and information and communications technologies, including by involving children, former victims, relevant NGOs and the information and communications technology and other relevant industries;
- (b) Provide children with age-appropriate information regarding safety when using digital media and information and communications technologies, so they can manage the risks and know where to go for help;
- (c) Coordinate with the information and communications technology industry so that it develops and puts in place adequate measures to protect children from violent and inappropriate material and other risks posed by digital media and information and communications technologies to children;
- (d) Further strengthen awareness-raising and education programmes for children on preventing and responding to risks when they use digital media and information and communications technologies, with the involvement of children, including through the development of child-friendly information material;
- (e) Provide adequate and continuous training for law enforcement personnel, members of the judiciary and professionals working with and for children with the aim to enhance their technical skills;
- (f) Ensure accessible, safe, confidential, age-appropriate, child-friendly and effective reporting channels, such as child hotlines, for reporting violations of children's rights in relation to digital media and information and communications technologies;
- (g) Provide safe, child-friendly and confidential points of contact for children to report self-generated sexual content to a relevant authority;
- (h) Provide fast and effective procedures for removal of prejudicial or harmful material involving children;
- Strengthen identification of victims as well as detection, investigation, prosecution and punishment of those responsible for any of the offences covered under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto;
- (j) Strengthen coordination between all actors and sectors in the protection system ensuring referral of cases and effective support to children victims;
- (k) Promote and facilitate international and regional coordination and collaboration to ensure effective enforcement of the applicable legal framework.

Effective remedies and reparation, and assistance to victims

23. States should ensure access to effective remedies for child victims, including assistance to seek prompt and appropriate reparation for the harm suffered, through providing State compensation where appropriate. States should also provide adequate support and assistance for child victims of violations related to digital media and information and communications technologies, including comprehensive services to ensure the child's full recovery and reintegration, and prevent revictimization of child victims.

Family environment

24. States should provide training, assistance and support services to parents, other caretakers and legal guardians to enable them to guide their children to a responsible and safe use of digital media and information and communications technologies, with respect for their evolving capacities. Training and support should not be limited to technical competence but should also include support in the performance of their general childrearing responsibilities.

Children with disabilities

25. The Committee recommends that States develop, implement and monitor legislation and policies to ensure the accessibility of digital media and information and communications technologies for children with disabilities including by incorporating accessibility requirements in policies related to the private sector, international cooperation and public procurement. In that context, States should ensure that public funds are used solely to promote the enjoyment and use of digital media and information and communications technologies and explicitly avoid creating or perpetuating discrimination resulting from inaccessible services and products. Moreover, States should promote the use of digital media and information and communications technologies to reinforce the creation of inclusive communities and education systems and to combat the dissemination of negative stereotypes, including by actively consulting with children with disabilities. The Committee also recommends that States ratify the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Marrakesh Treaty to Facilitate Access to Published Works for Persons who are Blind, Visually Impaired, or otherwise Print Disabled.

Education

26. The Committee recommends that States promote the development of digital literacy as part of the basic education curricula in accordance with children's evolving capacities. Training and education should not be limited to technical competence but should also include awareness of ethical principles and values and teach children skills to behave responsibly when they engage and relate to each other online, and to respond to risks appropriately and safely (social literacy). In addition, the Committee recommends that States ensure that sexual and reproductive health education is part of the mandatory school curriculum and targeted at adolescent girls and boys.

Periodic reporting under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto
