Systematic Torture and Medical Negligence of Detainees in Bahrain*

Introduction

In Bahrain, there have been continuous testimonies of detainees about physical, psychological abuse and torture, as well as the authorities' prohibition of victims from appropriate medical treatment and rehabilitation.

SALAM for Democracy and Human Rights monitored more than 50 cases of abuse against a number of political detainees and human rights activists, committed by security authorities in Bahrain during April 2018. Four detainees were subjected to various forms of torture, and 32 detainees were reportedly ill-treated, ranging from being deprived from attending funerals of their relatives, denial of visits, solitary confinement, denial of calls, and sport exercises, exit to the yard, and a ban on drinking water.

Continuous Torture and Mistreatment of Detainees

A detainee called Ahmed Ali Rahdi from the village of Nuwaidrat was harshly tortured, which resulted in the injury with fractures and bruises in different parts of his body. The detainee Mohammed Ahmed Ali from the village of Abu Saiba and the detainee Qasim Buhumaid from Al-Malikiya were subjected to solitary confinement while the detainee Qais Abbas from Ali village was confined for 5 hours under the hot sun after he asked the prison administration to allow him to go to the open area for exposure to the sun. Jaafar Al-Madani was denied access to call his family. In addition to these cases, prominent human rights activist and detainee in the prisons of Bahrain, Nabeel Rajab was even prevented from drinking water.

The ongoing monitoring of abuses indicates that brutal acts against political detainees and human rights activists in Bahrain are systematic, and officials of the Ministry of the Interior are aware of if not even directed by them. The detainees, even children and those with serious illnesses such as cancer, epilepsy, sclerosis, have been victims of the government's brutality. It has been also monitored that families of three of the detainees were also mistreated by security forces during raids on their homes.

Negligence of Medical Treatment

Not only were the security authorities and the prison administration committing serious violations. There have been continuous reports that detainees have been prevented from treatment for many periods that caused health complications. The authorities continue to delay treatment of detainees, ignoring the fact that the proper medical treatment is guaranteed by both local and international laws, as it is stipulated in the Constitution of Bahrain. In some cases, deteriorating psychological condition that resulted from torture caused several attempts of detainees to commit suicide.

During April 2018, more than 15 detainees were denied access to treatment and health care, and the authorities deliberately subjected a number of detainees to medical negligence, such as the case of detainee Yousef Mohammed Fathi from Muharraq, who was not treated and was deliberately neglected after having had a head tumor removed.

The list of prisoners who are banned from treatment and health care includes Ammar Sahwan, who is suffering from injuries caused by shotguns. Detainee Elias Al Mulla, who is suffering from cancer, and the detainee Mohamed Ahmed Ali, and Ahmed Al Qubaiti, who are wounded by shotgun fissions whom the authorities completely refuse to treat. The prominent human rights defender Nabeel Rajab was also prevented from undergoing surgery.
