Draft resolution III

Agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on thematic issues*

The Economic and Social Council

Endorses the following agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to the thematic issues addressed by the Commission at its forty-sixth session:

Agreed conclusions on eradicating poverty, including through the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle, in a globalizing world

1. The Commission on the Status of Women recalls and reiterates the strategic objectives and actions of the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome document adopted at the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Gender equality, development and peace in the twenty-first century”,²⁷ which emphasized the multidimensional nature of poverty and identified gender equality and the empowerment of women as critical factors in the eradication of poverty. It also recalls the United Nations Millennium Declaration²⁸ and the development goals contained therein, as well as the resolve to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty, hunger and disease and to stimulate development that is truly sustainable.

2. The Commission on the Status of Women recognizes that, while it is the primary responsibility of States to attain economic and social development and to achieve the development and poverty eradication goals as set out in the Millennium Declaration, the international community should support the efforts of the developing countries to eradicate poverty and ensure basic social protection and to promote an enabling international environment.

* For the discussion, see chap. III.

²⁸ General Assembly resolution 55/2.

3. While globalization has brought greater economic opportunities and autonomy to some women, many others, owing to the deepening inequalities among and within countries, have been marginalized and deprived of the benefits of this process. Globalization should be fully inclusive and equitable. To that end, there is a strong need for policies and measures at the national and international levels, formulated and implemented with the full and effective participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to help them respond effectively to those challenges and opportunities. Further efforts at the national and international levels should be made to eliminate the obstacles facing the integration of developing countries in the global economy.

4. The empowerment of women is the process by which women take control over their lives, acquiring the ability to make strategic choices. Empowerment is an important strategy to eradicate poverty. Special attention must be given to the situation of women and children, who often bear the greatest burden of extreme poverty.

5. The Commission urges Governments and, as appropriate, the relevant funds and programmes, organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, civil society, including the private sector and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and other stakeholders, to take the following actions to accelerate implementation of these strategic objectives to address the needs of all women:

(a) Ensure that all actions to achieve the poverty eradication goals established in the Millennium Declaration include the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle;

(b) Ensure that, in order to eradicate poverty and promote gender equality and democracy and strengthen the rule of law, both women and men are involved in decision-making, political agenda-setting and allocation of resources;

(c) Ensure that women and men have equal access to full and effective participation in all processes and that a gender perspective is mainstreamed in development, trade and financial institutions;

(d) Create an enabling environment and design and implement policies that promote and protect the enjoyment of all human rights — civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, including the right to development — and fundamental freedoms, as part of the efforts to achieve gender equality, development and peace;

(e) Evaluate the relationship between the empowerment of women and poverty eradication in different stages of women's life cycle and analyse the intersection of gender and other factors, reflect the implications for policies and programmes and compile and widely disseminate good practices and lessons learned;

(f) Strengthen efforts to mainstream gender perspectives and the empowerment of women through the whole policy process, from the identification to the formulation, implementation, evaluation and follow-up of macroeconomic policies, as well as economic and social policy formulation and implementation and poverty eradication policies, programmes, development frameworks and strategies;

(g) Establish or improve gender-specific analysis of poverty and strengthen institutional capacities at all levels, including relevant national machineries, in order to undertake gender analysis in poverty eradication initiatives by, inter alia, the allocation of sufficient resources;

(h) Improve the collection, compilation and dissemination of timely, reliable, comparable data disaggregated by sex and age and further develop quantitative and qualitative indicators, including social indicators, by national and international statistical organizations so as to increase capacity to measure, assess and analyse poverty among women and men, including at the household level, and make progress in the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle;

(i) Encourage the inclusion of data on women's equal access to land and other property in United Nations reports;

(j) Identify and take all appropriate measures to address obstacles to the empowerment of women and to their full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout the life cycle with the view to eradicate poverty;

(k) Take the strongest measures to eliminate all forms of discrimination and violence against women and girls;

(l) Incorporate a gender perspective into the design, development, adoption and execution of all budgetary processes, as well as economic and financial policies, in a transparent manner so as to ensure, where appropriate, that national budget policies and priorities as well as resource allocations support the eradication of poverty, the empowerment of women and the achievement of gender equality goals, and ensure women's full participation in all such processes;

(m) Review and reform, where appropriate, fiscal policies, particularly taxation policies, to ensure equality between women and men in this regard;

(n) Strengthen the provision of and ensure access to adequate, affordable and accessible public and social services to meet the needs of all women, in particular women living in poverty;

(o) Design, implement and promote family friendly policies and services, including affordable, accessible and quality care services for children and other dependants, parental and other leave schemes and campaigns to sensitize public opinion and other relevant actors on equal sharing of employment and family responsibilities between women and men;

(p) Improve and develop physical and mental health programmes and services, including preventive health care, for women, particularly women living in poverty;

(q) Strengthen policies and programmes at the national level to provide equal access to health care services for all women and girls, particularly for those living in poverty;

(r) Create and ensure equal access to all types of permanent and sustainable social protection/social security systems at all stages throughout women's life cycle, taking into account the specific needs of all women living in poverty;

(s) Ensure full and equal access at all levels to formal and non-formal education and training for women and girls, including pregnant adolescents and adolescent mothers, as key to their empowerment by, inter alia, the reallocation of resources, as necessary;

(t) Take urgent and effective measures in accordance with international law with a view to alleviating negative impact of economic sanctions on women and children;

(u) Enhance market access for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in particular for those sectors that provide greater employment opportunities for women, and expand access for women entrepreneurs to trade opportunities;

(v) Undertake socio-economic policies that promote sustainable development and support and ensure poverty eradication programmes, especially for women, by, inter alia, providing skills training, equal access to and control over resources, finance, credit, including microcredit, information and technology and equal access to markets to benefit women of all ages, in particular those living in poverty and marginalized women, including rural women, indigenous women and female-headed households;

(w) Take measures to develop and implement gender-sensitive programmes aimed at stimulating women's entrepreneurship and private initiative and assist women-owned business in participating in and benefiting from, inter alia, international trade, technological innovation and investment;

(x) Develop strategies to increase employment of women and to ensure that women, including women living in poverty, are protected by law against discriminatory terms and conditions of employment and any form of exploitation, that they benefit fully from job creation through a balanced representation of women and men in all sectors and occupations and that women receive equal pay for equal work or work of equal value to diminish differentials in incomes between women and men;

(y) Facilitate the transfer to developing countries and countries with economies in transition of appropriate technology, particularly new and modern technology, and encourage efforts by the international community to eliminate restrictions on such transfers as an effective means of complementing national efforts for further acceleration in achieving the goals of gender equality, development and peace;

(z) Promote and facilitate the equal access of women and girls, including those living in rural areas, to information and communication technologies, including newly developed technologies, and promote women's and girls' access to education and training in their use, access to, investment and use of these technologies for, inter alia, networking, advocacy, exchange of information, business, education, media consultation and e-commerce initiatives;

(aa) Ensure that national legislative and administrative reform processes, including those linked to land reform, decentralization and reorientation of the economy, promote women's rights, particularly those of rural women and women living in poverty, and take measures to promote and implement those rights through women's equal access to and control over economic resources, including land, property rights, right to inheritance, credit and traditional saving schemes, such as women's banks and cooperatives;

(bb) Ensure that clean water is available and accessible to all, particularly to women living in poverty;

(cc) Provide additional international financing and assistance to developing countries in support of their efforts to empower women and eradicate poverty and mainstream gender perspectives in the official development assistance process, including specific provisions for meeting the needs of women living in poverty in areas such as education, training, employment and health, as well as in social and economic policies, including macroeconomic policies, with a view of achieving sustainable development, and urge developed countries that have not done so to make concrete efforts towards the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP) as official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of GNP of developed countries to least developed countries, as reconfirmed at the Third United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries, and encourage developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help achieve development goals and targets;

(dd) Promote, in the spirit of solidarity, international cooperation, including through voluntary contributions, in order to undertake actions in the field of poverty eradication, particularly among women and girls;

(ee) Ensure that women, especially poor women in developing countries, benefit from the pursuit of effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, including the option of official development assistance debt cancellation, and call for continued international cooperation;

(ff) Forge constructive partnerships among Governments, NGOs, the private sector and other stakeholders to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women in poverty eradication efforts and to further support and encourage women and men, girls and boys, to form new advocacy networks and alliances.

6. The Commission on the Status of Women welcomes the convening of the International Conference on Financing for Development²⁹ and underlines the importance of its objectives in relation to gender equality, the empowerment of women and poverty eradication.

degradation and disasters affect all human lives and often have a more direct impact on women and that it was recommended that the role of women and the environment be further investigated. The twenty-third special session of the General Assembly (2000) identified natural disasters as a current challenge affecting the full implementation of the Platform for Action and emphasized the need to incorporate a gender perspective in the development and implementation of disaster prevention, mitigation and recovery strategies. The Commission also recalls the resolve in the United Nations Millennium Declaration (General Assembly resolution 55/2) to intensify cooperation to reduce the number and effects of natural and man-made disasters, as well as General Assembly resolution 46/182, which contained the guiding principles on humanitarian assistance.

2. Deeply convinced that economic development, social development and environmental protection are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development, which is the framework for our efforts to achieve a higher quality of life for all people.

3. The Commission reiterates the strategic objectives and actions adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing in 1995, and in the outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, held in New York in 2000, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”.²⁷

4. The Commission recognizes that women play a vital role in disaster reduction (prevention, mitigation and preparedness), response and recovery and in natural resources management, that disaster situations aggravate vulnerable conditions and that some women face particular vulnerabilities in this context.

5. The Commission also recognizes that women’s strengths in dealing with disasters and supporting their families and communities should be built upon following disasters to rebuild and restore their communities and mitigate against future disasters.

6. The Commission recognizes the need to enhance women’s capacities and institutional mechanisms to respond to disasters in order to enhance gender equality and the empowerment of women.

7. The Commission urges Governments and, as appropriate, also urges the relevant funds and programmes, organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, civil society, including the private sector and NGOs, and other stakeholders, to take the following actions to accelerate implementation of these strategic objectives to address the needs of all women:

(a) Pursue gender equality and gender-sensitive environmental management and disaster reduction, response and recovery as an integral part of sustainable development;

(b) Take measures to integrate a gender perspective in the design and implementation of, among other things, environmentally sound and sustainable resource and disaster management mechanisms and establish mechanisms to review such efforts;

(c) Ensure the full participation of women in sustainable development decision-making and disaster reduction management at all levels;

(d) Ensure the full enjoyment by women and girls of all human rights — civil, cultural, economic, political and social, including the right to development — including in disaster reduction, response and recovery; in this context, special attention should be given to the prevention and prosecution of gender-based violence;

(e) Mainstream a gender perspective into ongoing research by, inter alia, the academic sector on the impact of climate change, natural hazards, disasters and related environmental vulnerability, including their root causes, and encourage the application of the results of this research in policies and programmes;

(f) Collect demographic and socio-economic data and information disaggregated by sex and age, develop national gender-sensitive indicators and analyse gender differences with regard to environmental management, disaster occurrence and associated losses and risks and vulnerability reduction;

(g) Develop, review and implement, as appropriate, with the involvement and participation of women's groups, gender sensitive laws, policies and programmes, including on land-use and urbanization planning, natural resource and environmental management and integrated water resources management, to provide opportunities to prevent and mitigate damage;

(h) Encourage, as appropriate, the development and implementation of national building standards that take into account natural hazards so that women, men and their families are not exposed to high risk from disasters;

(i) Include gender analysis and methods of mapping hazards and vulnerabilities at the design stage of all relevant development programmes and projects in order to improve the effectiveness of disaster risk management, involving women and men equally;

(j) Ensure women's equal access to information and formal and non-formal education on disaster reduction, including through gender-sensitive early warning systems, and empower women to take related action in a timely and appropriate manner;

(k) Promote income generating activities and employment opportunities, including through the provision of microcredit and other financial instruments, ensure equal access to resources, in particular land and property ownership, including housing, and take measures to empower women as producers and consumers, in order to enhance the capacity of women to respond to disasters;

(l) Design and implement gender-sensitive economic relief and recovery projects and ensure equal economic opportunities for women, including both in the formal and non-formal sectors, taking into account the loss of land and property, including housing and other productive and personal assets;

(m) Make women full and equal partners in the development of safer communities and in determining national or local priorities for disaster reduction and incorporate local and indigenous knowledge, skills and capacities into environmental management and disaster reduction;

(n) Support capacity-building at all levels aimed at disaster reduction, based on knowledge about women's and men's needs and opportunities;

(o) Introduce formal and non-formal education and training programmes at all levels, including in the areas of science, technology and economics, with an integrated and gender-sensitive approach to environmentally sound and sustainable resource management and disaster reduction, response and recovery in order to change behaviour and attitudes in rural and urban areas;

(p) Ensure the implementation of their commitments by all Governments made in Agenda 21 and the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly,²⁷ including those in the areas of financial and technical assistance and the transfer of environmentally sound technologies to the developing countries, and ensure that a gender perspective is mainstreamed into all such assistance and transfers;

(q) Document good practice and lessons-learned, particularly from effective community-based strategies for disaster reduction, response and recovery, which actively involve women as well as men, and widely disseminate this information to all stakeholders;

(r) Improve and develop physical and mental health programmes, services and social support networks for women who suffer from the effects of natural disasters, including trauma;

(s) Strengthen the capacities of ministries, emergency authorities, practitioners and communities to apply a gender-sensitive approach to environmental management and disaster reduction and the involvement of women professionals and field workers;

(t) Forge constructive partnerships between Governments, international organizations and civil society, including the private sector and NGOs, and other stakeholders in integrated and gender sensitive sustainable development initiatives to reduce environmental risks;

(u) Encourage civil society, including NGOs, to mainstream a gender perspective in the promotion of sustainable development initiatives, including in disaster reduction;

(v) Ensure coordination in the United Nations system, including the full and active participation of funds, programmes and specialized agencies to mainstream a gender perspective in sustainable development including, inter alia, environmental management and disaster reduction activities.

8. The Commission on the Status of Women calls for the integration of a gender perspective in the implementation of all policies and treaties related to sustainable development and in the review of the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, scheduled for 2004.

9. The Commission on the Status of Women welcomes the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction efforts to mainstream a gender perspective in the mitigation of disasters.

10. The Commission on the Status of Women welcomes the policy statement of the Inter-agency Standing Committee for the integration of a gender perspective in humanitarian affairs of 31 May 1999.

11. The Commission on the Status of Women welcomes the convening of the International Conference on Financing for Development²⁹ and takes note of the recognition contained in the draft Monterrey Consensus of the particular needs of women and the importance of gender equality and the empowerment of women, as well as the recognition of the impact of disasters.

12. The Commission on the Status of Women also welcomes the convening of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, to be held in Johannesburg, stresses the importance of gender mainstreaming throughout the process and urges gender balance in the composition of delegations as well as the involvement and full participation of women in the preparations, work and outcome of the World Summit, thus renewing the commitment to gender equality objectives at the international level. The Commission on the Status of Women further reiterates that all States and all people shall cooperate in the essential task of eradicating poverty as an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in order to decrease the disparities in standards of living and better meet the needs of the majority of the people of the world.

Resolution 46/1

Release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts*

The Commission on the Status of Women,

Recalling its resolutions 39/2 of 31 March 1995, 40/1 of 22 March 1996, 41/1 of 21 March 1997, 42/2 of 13 March 1998, 43/1 of 12 March 1999, 44/1 of 2 March 2000 and 45/1 of 17 March 2001,

Recalling also the relevant provisions contained in the instruments of international humanitarian law relative to the protection of the civilian population, as such,

* For the discussion, see chap. III.

Taking into account the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/146 of 17 December 1979, which also recognizes that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person and that the taking of hostages is an offence of grave concern to the international community,

Welcoming the adoption of the Beijing Declaration³³ and Platform for Action³⁴ adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, as well as the final outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”,³⁵ including the provisions regarding violence against women and children,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/38 of 23 April 2001 on hostage-taking, adopted at the fifty-seventh session, of the Commission,³⁶

Expressing grave concern at the continuation of armed conflicts in many regions throughout the world and the human suffering and humanitarian emergencies they have caused,

Emphasizing that all forms of violence in areas of armed conflict committed against the civilian population, including taking women and children hostage, seriously contravene international humanitarian law, in particular as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,³⁷

Expressing its strong belief that the rapid and unconditional release of women and children taken hostage in areas of armed conflict will promote the implementation of the noble goals enshrined in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome documents of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”,³⁸

“The Commission on the Status of Women,

“Recalling, its resolutions 39/2 of 31 March 1995, 40/1 of 22 March 1996, 41/1 of 21 March 1997, 42/2 of 13 March 1998, 43/1 of 12 March 1999, 44/1 of 2 March 2000 and 45/1 of 17 March 2001,

“Recalling also the relevant provisions contained in the instruments of international humanitarian law relative to the protection of civilians, including women and children, in areas of armed conflict,

“Taking into account the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/146 of 17 December 1979, which also recognizes that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person and that the taking of hostages is an offence of grave concern to the international community,

“Welcoming the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, including the provisions regarding violence against women and children, as well as the final outcome document of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled ‘Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century’,

“Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 2001/38 of 23 April 2001 on hostage-taking, adopted at the fifty-seventh session of the Commission,

“Expressing grave concern at the continuation of armed conflicts in many regions throughout the world and the human suffering and humanitarian emergencies they have caused,

¹ In accordance with rule 69 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council.

“Emphasizing that all forms of violence in areas of armed conflict committed against the civilian population, including women and children, including capturing them as hostages, seriously contravene international humanitarian law, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Protocols additional thereto,

“Concerned that, despite the efforts of the international community, acts of hostage-taking in different forms and manifestations, inter alia, those committed by terrorists and armed groups, continue to take place and have even increased in many regions of the world,

“Recognizing that hostage-taking calls for resolute, firm and concerted efforts on the part of the international community in order, in strict conformity with international human rights standards, to bring such abhorrent practices to an end,

“Expressing its strong belief that the rapid and unconditional release of women and children taken hostage in areas of armed conflict will promote the implementation of the noble goals enshrined in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

“1. Reaffirms that hostage-taking, wherever and by whomsoever committed, is an illegal act aimed at the destruction of human rights and is, under any circumstances, unjustifiable, including as a means to promote and protect human rights;

“2. Condemns violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, and calls for an effective response to such acts, including the immediate release of such women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts;

“3. Condemns also torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as well as rape, slavery, and trafficking in women and children for the removal of organs, which are the most grave consequences of hostage-taking;

“4. Strongly urges all parties to armed conflicts to respect fully the norms of international humanitarian law in armed conflict and to take all necessary measures for the protection of civilian women and children not involved in hostilities and for their immediate release;

“5. Urges all parties to armed conflicts to provide safe and unimpeded access to humanitarian assistance for these women and children;

“6. Requests the Secretary-General and all relevant international organizations to use their capabilities and efforts to facilitate the immediate release of civilian women and children involved in hostilities;

Women, the girl child and human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS)

“The Commission on the Status of Women,

“Recognizing that women play a vital role in the social and economic development of their countries, and therefore profoundly concerned by the fact that out of 40 million people living with human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) today, women now represent about half of all people over age fifteen living with HIV and AIDS,

“Noting with great concern that the proportion of women becoming infected with HIV is growing in every region, that in sub-Saharan Africa the majority of those living with HIV are women and that, in the younger age brackets (fifteen to twenty-four years of age), girls are at higher risk of HIV infection and more girls than boys are now infected, and welcoming, in this context, the International Partnership against AIDS in Africa,

“Mindful that the majority of women and the girl child in most developing countries do not enjoy full social and economic rights, such as education, health care and welfare, and therefore suffer disproportionately from the consequences of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, particularly in the economic and social spheres,

“Recognizing that women, who constitute the majority of the poor, are especially vulnerable to HIV infection because of their subordinate status in society, in the household and in communities and because of their restricted access to education, gainful employment and health and information services,

“Also recognizing that women, in particular young girls, are physiologically and biologically more vulnerable than men to sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV, and yet receive minimal health care and support when infected,

“Noting with concern that approximately 80 per cent of the infected women have been infected through unprotected sex with an infected male partner, and acknowledging, therefore, that men have a shared responsibility towards protecting their own and women’s sexual health,

“Acknowledging that millions of women do not have access to means that have proved effective in preventing and lowering infection rates, such as male and female condoms, anti-retroviral drugs, relevant preventive education, acceptable counselling and testing services,

“Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) and its co-sponsoring organizations, the United Nations

Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Labour Organization and the World Bank, to empower women through capacity development programmes, as well as programmes that provide women with access to development resources and strengthen their networks which offer care and support to women affected by HIV/AIDS,

"1. Welcomes the outcome of the Organization of African Unity Special Summit on HIV/AIDS in Abuja, Nigeria, in April 2001, and the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS: "Global Crisis — Global Action", adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth special session, in June 2001;

"2. Reaffirms the commitment by Governments to the HIV/AIDS goals and objectives contained in the Political Declaration and further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, as adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-third special session entitled 'Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century';

"3. Also reaffirms the rights of women and the girl child infected and affected by HIV/AIDS to have access to health, education and social services, including counselling, and to be protected from all forms of discrimination, stigma, abuse and neglect;

"4. Further reaffirms the human rights of girls and women to equal access to education, skills training and employment opportunities as a means to reduce their vulnerability to HIV infection;

"5. Urges Governments to take all necessary measures to strengthen women's economic independence and to protect and promote their human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to allow them to better protect themselves from HIV infection;

"6. Emphasizes that the advancement and empowerment of women is critical to increasing the ability of women and young girls to protect themselves from HIV infection;

"7. Stresses that every effort should be made by Governments, relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively, to place combating HIV/AIDS as a priority on the development agenda and to implement effective prevention strategies and programmes, especially for the most vulnerable populations, including women, young girls and infants, also taking into account the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV;

"8. Calls upon the international community, relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their support of national efforts against HIV/AIDS, particularly in favour of women and young girls, in the worst-hit regions of Africa and where the epidemic is severely setting back national development gains;

“9. Urges Governments to take steps to create an environment that promotes compassion and support for people infected with HIV/AIDS, to provide the legal framework that will protect the rights of people living with HIV/AIDS, to enable those who are vulnerable to have access to appropriate voluntary counselling services and to encourage efforts to reduce discrimination and stigmatization;

“10. Also urges Governments, with the assistance of relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to create an environment and conditions that will take care of and support children orphaned by AIDS;

“11. Encourages Governments to recognize the challenges facing girls and women, particularly older women, who are primary caregivers for people living with HIV/AIDS, and to provide them with the necessary economic and psychosocial support;

“12. Further urges Governments, with the assistance of relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, to adopt a long-term, timely, coherent and integrated AIDS prevention policy, with public information and life-skills-based education programmes specifically tailored to the needs of women and girls within their socio-cultural contexts and sensitivities and the specific needs in their life cycle;

“13. Encourages Governments and civil society to support women’s groups and community organizations in changing harmful traditions and practices affecting the health of women and girls and to take steps to eliminate all forms of violence against women, including rape and sexual coercion, which aggravate the conditions fostering the spread of the epidemic;

“14. Encourages accelerated research on vaccine development and intensified additional research on promotion of the female condom, microbicides and other options that offer women more control over the protection of their reproductive and sexual health;

“15. Requests Governments to ensure that condoms and treatment for sexually transmitted diseases are available and affordable in places accessible to women while ensuring their privacy;

“16. Also requests Governments to provide comprehensive health care for women with HIV, including treatment for opportunistic diseases and reproductive health services;

“17. Reaffirms the value of coordination by the Joint United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS), and calls upon all entities of the United Nations system to examine their programmes of work in order to incorporate activities to combat HIV/AIDS, especially among women and children;

“18. Welcomes the efforts of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS in promoting sexual and reproductive health education for young people, in particular girls, while encouraging them to delay sexual initiation, and, in this context, urges that greater attention be given to the education of men and boys about their roles and their responsibilities in preventing the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS, to their partners;

“19. Urges the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and its co-sponsors to intensify their efforts in assisting Governments in determining the best policies and programmes to prevent women and young girls from becoming infected with HIV/AIDS;

“20. Requests the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and its co-sponsors, bilateral and multilateral donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in their efforts to prevent HIV infection, to give urgent and priority attention to the situation of women and girls in Africa;

“21. Invites the relevant entities of the United Nations system, including agencies, funds and programmes, to mainstream gender policies and programmes integrating HIV/AIDS activities.”

40. At the same meeting, the representative of Malawi orally revised the draft resolution. The revisions were subsequently issued in document E/CN.6/2002/L.3/Rev.1, which read as follows:

“The Commission on the Status of Women,

“Recalling General Assembly resolution S-26/2 of 27 June 2001 entitled “Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS”, adopted at its twenty-sixth special session, held in New York from 25 to 27 June 2001, “Reaffirms the need to urgently implement the commitments by Governments to the goals and objectives contained in the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS adopted by the General Assembly, “Noting also the linkage between HIV/AIDS, gender, poverty underdevelopment and environmental degradation and the adverse impact on the lives of women and girls,

“1. Calls upon Governments, to intensify efforts to challenge gender stereotypes and attitudes and gender inequalities in relation to HIV/AIDS, encouraging the active participation and involvement of men and boys;

“2. Requests Governments, by 2005, to develop, strengthen and accelerate the implementation of national strategies that promote the advancement of women and their full enjoyment of all human rights, promote shared responsibility of men and women to ensure the practice of safe sex and empower women to have control over and decide freely and responsibly on matters related to their sexuality to increase their ability to protect themselves from HIV infection;

“4. Urges Governments by 2005, to implement measures to increase the capacity of women and adolescent girls to protect themselves from the risk of HIV infection, principally through the provision of health care and health services, including sexual and reproductive health services, as well as through prevention education programmes that promote gender equality within a culturally and gender-sensitive framework;

“5. Also urges Governments, in line with the targets of the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly, to reduce the proportion of infants infected with HIV by 20 per cent by 2005, and by 50 per cent by 2010, by ensuring that 80 per cent of pregnant women accessing antenatal care have information, counselling and other HIV-prevention services available to them, increasing the availability of, and providing access for HIV-infected women and babies to, effective treatment to reduce mother-to-child transmission of HIV, as well as through effective interventions for HIV-infected women, including voluntary and confidential counselling and testing, access to treatment, especially anti-retroviral therapy and, where appropriate, breast-milk substitutes and the provision of a continuum of care;

At the 15th meeting, on 25 March, the Commission decided to take note of the report of the Working Group, as amended during the discussion, and agreed to include it in the report of the Commission (for the text of the decision, see chap. I, sect. C, decision 46/102). The Commission also agreed to include in its report statements of reservation made by delegations during the discussion of and action on the decision (see annex III). The report of the Working Group follows:

Report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women

1. The Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women was guided in its deliberations by the mandate given by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 76 (V), as amended by the Council in its resolutions 304 I (XI), 1983/27 and 1992/19.

2. The Working Group considered the list of confidential communications (E/CN.6/2002/SW/COMM.LIST/36). There was no list of non-confidential communications concerning the status of women since no such communications had been received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The Working Group considered the six confidential communications received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Secretariat and the 17 confidential communications received by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights concerning the status of women. It also took note of the fact that no confidential communications concerning the status of women had been received by other United Nations bodies or the specialized agencies.

4. The Working Group noted the grave violations of women's human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and the discrimination against women. It also noted the violence against women and girls and their exclusion from full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Working Group also noted cases of the failure of authorities to take appropriate action regarding violations of women's human rights.

5. The Working Group noted discrimination against women, including through restrictions on their freedom of movement, stemming from law and custom. It noted that in some cases foreign domestic workers had been arbitrarily detained, denied access to defence lawyers, tortured and sexually abused in detention by police officers, subjected to cursory trials and denied protection and redress from the authorities for rape, physical and verbal abuse and beatings by their employers.

6. The Working Group noted a great number of persons, including women and children, who have been compelled to carry out forced labour for weeks and months at a time, in unspeakable conditions for health and safety, resulting in many deaths.

7. The Working Group noted the inhumane treatment, sexual harassment and torture of women in custody, including indigenous women. It also noted violations of the right to freedom of expression, wrongful arrests and gender specific discriminatory practices, such as virginity testing, rape and sexual assault at work, and employment-related fines and penalties tied to family planning.

8. The Working Group noted the poor conditions of detention and the forcible repatriation of refugees, including pregnant women and nursing mothers, of a particular ethnic group and the rape of a number of the women concerned by soldiers. It also noted that a number of those persons, including women, died of suffocation during their journey by cargo train to their neighbouring country of origin.

9. The Working Group noted the ongoing harassment, including acts of violence, intimidation and death threats, of women human rights defenders, women journalists and women members of the political opposition, by members of the police. The Working Group also noted the violation of the basic human rights of human rights defenders, including women, by, for instance, the misuse of forcible psychiatric treatment, the intimidation of lawyers representing detainees and family members and the use of charges of unlawful assembly to prevent the persons concerned from carrying out their legitimate activities.

10. The Working Group noted the large number of communications indicating that, in one case, a harsh system of rule had revoked nearly all of the rights and freedoms of women guaranteed to all persons under the Charter of the United Nations and various human rights instruments. Flagrant violations included denial of their civil and political rights, their economic, social and cultural rights, including their freedom of movement, their right to work and their access to education, employment and health care. The Working Group noted that women had been beaten, imprisoned and even killed for disobeying decrees issued under the system of rule. The Working Group welcomed the recent changes governing the situation of women in that case. It identified impunity of perpetrators of violations of the rights of women as a continuing concern.

Report considered by the Commission on the Status of Women under agenda item 4

11. At its 16th meeting, on 25 March, on the proposal of the Chairperson, the Commission decided to take note of the report of the Secretary-General assessing the implications of the reforms of mechanisms in the human rights area (1503 procedure) for communications concerning the status of women (E/CN.6/2002/12) (for the text, see chap. I, sect. C, decision 46/103).

Peters (Netherlands), Audra Plepytė (Lithuania), Connie Taracena Secaira (Guatemala) and Séraphine Toé (Burkina Faso). The working group held three meetings.

Annex I

Summary submitted by the moderator of the panel discussion on eradicating poverty, including through the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle in a globalizing world (Fernando Estellita Lins de Salvo Coimbra) (agenda item 3 (c) (i))

1. At its 5th meeting, on 6 March 2002, the Commission on the Status of Women held a panel discussion followed by a dialogue on eradicating poverty, including through the empowerment of women throughout their life cycle in a globalizing world, one of the thematic issues of the Commission's forty-sixth session. The panellists were Savitri Bisnath (Trinidad and Tobago), expert on global governance, at the World Trade Organization, and on the macro effects of the General Agreement on Trade in Services; Gaudence Rwamaheke (Burundi), General Director of the Ministry of Social Action and the Advancement of Women; and Jan Vandemoortele (Belgium), Principal Adviser and Group Leader, Socio-Economic Development Group, United Nations Development Programme. The panel was moderated by Fernando Estellita Lins de Salvo Coimbra (Brazil).

2. Participants discussed the challenge of poverty eradication within the present context of globalization. It was recognized that a significant increase in international cooperation was essential for the implementation of the Millennium Declaration and its development goals. The goal of halving, by 2015, the number of persons living in extreme poverty, in particular, had to be pursued urgently. Achievement of that goal required reduction in women's poverty. Gender equality and the empowerment of women were effective means for poverty eradication, as had been highlighted in the Millennium Declaration.

3. Participants noted that globalization created both challenges and opportunities. While some countries and regions were benefiting from globalization through integration and economic growth, many others had become further marginalized, with deepening disparities and increased levels of poverty among and within countries. It was stated that the present phase of globalization was characterized by the use of economic liberalization and privatization as the preferred policy instruments, aiming at open markets, increased trade and increased competition between sectors and countries. It was noted however that those strategies and actions should not be considered a panacea and that market forces should be counterbalanced by social policies aimed at promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women.

4. The differential impact of globalization on women and men was pointed out and speakers identified both opportunities and challenges with regard to reducing women's poverty and enhancing their empowerment. Economic restructuring and adjustment, and reduction of social expenditures affected women more and differently than men. Speakers noted the absence of convincing evidence showing that economic growth and openness systematically reduced poverty or improved the quality of life for the vast majority of women and men, especially in developing countries. Trade policies produced different outcomes for women and men and gender-based inequalities affected trade policy outcomes. As a consequence, it was suggested that gender analysis should become an essential component of trade policy formulation.

5. Participants emphasized that political will, while very important, was in itself insufficient to achieve gender equality and the empowerment of women. Other factors, such as policy frameworks, institutional mechanisms, including for evaluation and monitoring, and sufficient resources were also necessary. The importance of good governance, sound government policies and the rule of law in the promotion of gender equality were also highlighted.

6. Many participants stressed the need for concrete actions and a comprehensive and integrated approach with innovative solutions to follow up on the commitments made on poverty reduction and the empowerment of women.

7. In responding to the challenges of poverty eradication, the role of women as actors and agents of change was highlighted. Some participants noted that poverty was particularly concentrated among older women and the inter-generational transfer of poverty increased when they had to assume responsibility as heads of households. The particular vulnerability of poor rural women, who could not take advantage of the trade-related opportunities of globalization, was an issue raised. Their lack of mobility was a factor that also had to be addressed.

8. Participants were concerned about the insufficient integration of macroeconomic goals and policies with social goals and policies and argued that the efficacy of macroeconomic policies did not hinge solely on economic factors, but also on specific social, political and infrastructural factors. Continuation of their present separation could thus reinforce and perpetuate existing inequalities between women and men and cause failure in achieving poverty reduction and the empowerment of women. While some progress had been made, further efforts were necessary at both the global and national levels to integrate social development objectives into macroeconomic policies in order to meet the goals of the Millennium Declaration. To that end, coordination between the economic, finance and social sectors should be promoted.

9. It was suggested that gender equality, like poverty eradication, was to be seen in the context of the struggle to fulfil all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It was therefore particularly important to put in place accountability mechanisms so as to ensure progress in achieving agreed-upon goals nationally and internationally. Participants identified a range of actors that were called upon to implement, and should be accountable for, policies and actions towards the empowerment of women and poverty eradication, including Governments, the private sector, the United Nations system, international financial institutions and civil society. Most importantly, women themselves, and women's non-governmental organizations were identified as catalysts for their own empowerment. Networks and coalitions of women's groups working across borders should be strengthened, as they provided opportunities for women to share experiences, address common problems and learn from positive examples. Efforts were necessary to ensure that a broader range of actors, for example, ministries of finance, take responsibility for integrating gender perspectives in sectoral policies and programmes and especially in national poverty eradication strategies. Emphasis was also placed on the role of men in the empowerment of women.

10. Participants underscored the importance of solidarity both within countries and internationally in order to eradicate poverty and achieve human development. Speakers referred to the proposal of establishing a world solidarity fund for poverty eradication and the promotion of human and social development. The suggestion was also made to tap the worldwide movement of women's solidarity for reviewing progress in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action.

11. Speakers recalled that equality between women and men was a fundamental human right and a means for fostering human development. The empowerment of women required the promotion and protection of women's human rights throughout their life cycle. Poverty eradication policies should thus be undertaken within a human rights framework, rather than strictly taking a social welfare approach. The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was a very good tool for the eradication of poverty among women, especially with regard to education, health, women's participation in decision-making and through temporary special measures, as called for in article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Speakers identified violence against women as an obstacle to poverty eradication and called for positive action to overcome it. The importance of combating multiple discrimination, particularly gender and racial discrimination, was also identified as a major issue.

12. The education of girls and women was a key entry point for poverty eradication and women's empowerment. Concern was expressed that, notwithstanding the recognition of the benefits that resulted from investment in girls' and adolescents' education, insufficient progress was being made in increasing enrolment rates and literacy. Data and experience showed that investment in the education of girls and adolescents had one of the highest returns among investments in development. Educated women were also less vulnerable to diseases, including HIV/AIDS. Job training for women, in particular in non-traditional sectors, had poverty-reduction and empowerment effects. Women's participation in decision-making was also highlighted as an aspect of empowerment.

13. Participants emphasized the role of employment and women's access to and control over resources for poverty eradication and empowerment. In that regard, emphasis was placed on the availability of credit, land reform and women's inheritance rights to enable them to become true economic actors. While microcredit was a good tool to support women in poverty, its effectiveness varied from context to context. Some speakers favoured a more critical and differentiated approach to microcredit, as it could also lead to indebtedness and the even greater poverty of women. It was noted that, by itself, microcredit was insufficient and had to be accompanied by other measures, such as training. Mainstream financial services for women also had to be enhanced. Social protection systems should be extended to cover economic sectors dominated by women, such as the informal economy and casual and flexible forms of work. Women workers' rights, especially in export processing zones, had to be protected.

14. Insufficient statistical data and lack of appropriate indicators made it difficult to measure poverty among women, assess progress in the empowerment and advancement of women and ensure accountability. Many participants called for the development of indicators, in particular impact and outcome indicators, as well as for the increased collection of sex-disaggregated data, to improve the monitoring of and accountability for the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the goals contained in the Millennium Declaration. Research institutions had an important role in the development of qualitative and quantitative measurement tools. Participants discussed the danger of "misplaced concreteness", inherent in the predominant use of aggregates and average statistics, such as gross domestic product, average household income and the rate of economic growth. Those average statistics and indicators tended to hide important disparities and realities, but were commonly used for policy-making. Careful gender analysis of particular situations could avoid misleading or unwarranted conclusions and indicate appropriate policy actions and programme interventions.

15. Tools for gender analysis and for increased accountability also needed to be improved. Gender budgeting was considered to be an important instrument for monitoring the distribution of resources and for increasing accountability for commitments made. Financial resources had to be mobilized to accelerate the implementation of the commitments of Beijing. In that respect, speakers called for an increase in official development assistance. It was also suggested that a larger share of official development assistance as well as of national budgets should be invested in social areas, such as education and health. The forthcoming

International Conference on Financing for Development was an opportunity to address that matter.

16. Participants stressed that external debt reduction or cancellation was necessary to free resources for poverty eradication programmes in low- and medium-income countries. Opportunities should be sought to make the Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers more gender-sensitive.

Annex II

Summary submitted by the moderator of the panel discussion on environmental management and mitigation of natural disasters: a gender perspective (Kyung-wha Kang) (agenda item 3 (c) (ii))

1. At its sixth meeting, on 6 March 2002, the Commission held a panel discussion, followed by a dialogue, on the theme “Environmental management and mitigation of natural disasters: a gender perspective”, one of the thematic issues before the Commission. The panellists were Sálvano Briceño (Venezuela), Director of the United Nations inter-agency secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction; J. Marie Yolene V. Surena (Haiti), Director, Civil Protection Directorate, Ministry of the Interior; Elaine Enarson (United States of America), scholar and founding member of the Gender and Disaster Network; and Idiatou Camara (Guinea), National Director of the Environment. The panel was moderated by Kyung-wha Kang (Republic of Korea).

2. Participants stated that in recent years natural hazards, such as earthquakes, landslides, drought, floods, storms and tropical cyclones, wildland fires and volcanic eruptions, had caused major loss of human lives and livelihoods, destruction of economic and social infrastructure and environmental damage. Both small- and medium-scale disasters had increased substantially, with climate change, environmental mismanagement and degradation, unsustainable exploitation of natural resources, unplanned urbanization and population growth considered to be among the major causes of increased risk and vulnerability to natural disasters.

3. It was noted that the impact and consequences of natural disasters could be devastating unless appropriate measures are taken. More than 100,000 lives were lost in 1999, and by 2050 approximately $US 300 billion will be required annually in order to address the problems associated with natural disasters. Rural areas are especially affected due to fragile economies and survival strategies based on agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Furthermore, people living in rural areas frequently experience loss of livestock and land, which has an impact on their livelihoods, causing increased rural-to-urban migration. Participants stressed that losses resulting from natural disasters have slowed and even reversed the development of some regions, especially in the least developed countries. The ratio of economic loss in relation to gross national product is far higher in the developing than in developed countries. Moreover, in developing countries the emphasis on disaster response has often diverted attention and funds that would normally be targeted for development activities.

4. Participants emphasized that, although natural hazards could not be prevented, their impact and consequences could be mitigated by addressing and combating, from a gender perspective, their root causes, including social, political, economic and cultural vulnerabilities. Stressing the need to look at disasters “through women’s eyes”, participants noted that the gendered division of labour, sexual and reproductive health, women’s longevity, household and economic structures and gender inequalities put women at greater risk than men in situations of disasters. Women’s vulnerabilities are accentuated during and after a natural disaster, with discriminatory behaviour, including violence against women, becoming more visible in the period following a natural disaster. The vulnerability of female-headed households was also highlighted.

5. Although women’s social, economic and political position in many societies make them more vulnerable to natural hazards, participants stressed that women should be perceived not merely as helpless victims but also as important agents for change. Women play crucial roles at critical junctures, from risk assessment and hazard mitigation to emergency preparedness, disaster response and post-disaster reconstruction. After disasters, they are often key players in the rebuilding of communities, the promotion of safety and ensuring normality in everyday life. Women’s capacity to reduce and manage risk should be strengthened as one of the first steps in building more disaster-resilient communities. Women should also be empowered so that they can be involved in all phases of disasters, from preparedness and early warning through mitigation and recovery.

6. A human rights approach framed the debate, with participants suggesting that in the aftermath of a disaster, a window of opportunity for social change frequently appears, during which new legislation, policies and programmes aimed at promoting gender equality, women's empowerment and more equitable and sustainable living conditions can be formulated and applied. Opportunities to challenge fundamental inequalities in gender relations frequently present themselves and should be seized. Legislation to protect and promote women's human rights, including with regard to natural resources, such as land and water, participation in the paid labour market and in political and public life, and access to education and training can all be introduced or strengthened. International human rights treaties, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, can also provide the framework for the development of disaster planning and response.

7. Participants stressed the need to instil a culture of prevention, safety and disaster preparedness in communities in order to reduce and mitigate the impact of natural disasters. To increase preparedness, risk maps, including gender-based hazard maps, based on the assessment of the risks and vulnerabilities, should be created. Early warning systems and urban-planning-monitoring based on detailed, accurate and current information on hazards and vulnerabilities directed at minimizing exposure to vulnerabilities are also considered to be important for ensuring preparedness.

8. High-quality studies and statistics disaggregated by sex and age that take into consideration different social relations, roles and responsibilities in disaster management, development and environmental management and risk reduction were considered to be essential tools in the assessment of vulnerabilities and the mitigation of the impact of natural disasters. In order to promote women's role in environmental management and disaster mitigation more effectively, the development of specific programmes to encourage and support multidisciplinary and comparative research and disaggregated data analysis is considered essential. Participants also stressed the need to compile and distribute information related to case studies on good practices and lessons learned, as well as information on successful laws, policies and programmes being implemented in various countries in the area of environmental management and natural disasters. These should be made widely available in an accessible form and language.

9. The link between environmental degradation and poverty, especially that of women, was underlined. Participants stated that poverty limits the knowledge and technical ability to address problems and forces people to rely on non-renewable resources. The need to address the issue of poverty by implementing United Nations Millennium Declaration goals was highlighted, with participants emphasizing the importance of the development of alternative technologies in order to address climate change and reverse the damage that exacerbates natural hazards and to promote the use of renewable resources, such as gas, solar and wind-energy. Analysis of the relationship between disaster risk reduction and globalization to ensure that trade is not interrupted during natural disasters is also critical.

10. Changing values, attitudes and behaviour are a key part of a disaster reduction strategy. Awareness-raising programmes at all levels (pre-school, primary, secondary and tertiary), as well as gender-sensitive programme-targeted training and awareness-raising campaigns on environmental management and risk management, are considered essential. Media and other information and communication technologies, including new forms of such technologies, can play a major part in changing values and combating gender stereotypes and biases and in disseminating best practices and positive experience in disaster contexts.

11. The participation and involvement of local communities and civil society in general and women's groups in particular are considered central for addressing the issue of natural disasters mitigation. Women's active role in society before, during and after natural disasters, the knowledge of natural resources management among women's groups and networks, and their involvement and that of other community-based organizations in the decision-making process was stressed by many participants as a necessity to ensure sustainability. Gender equality in disaster reduction requires the empowerment of women so that they can play a greater role in leadership and management. The need for women to be empowered as decision-makers in order to participate fully to the formulation and implementation of disaster mitigation policies was brought to the fore. Some suggested that shifting decision-making on environmental issues to the local levels can give women greater opportunities for participation.

12. Investing in women as a strategy for environmental risk management is considered to be crucial. Managing environmental risk is part of the development process, with the ultimate goal being to create a participatory framework in which responsibilities between actors are balanced and all groups of the community, including older men and women, are involved.

13. The need for political will to change cultural values and overturn the current focus on short-term interests and nurture a shift towards long-term planning was stressed. Participants also highlighted the importance of developing codes of conduct for all parties engaged in public-private partnerships in order to increase the social responsibility of private companies, curb damaging practices and foster gender equality and sustainable development.

14. Adopting an integrated approach that links gender equality, disaster reduction and sustainable development is considered to be essential. Thus, participants stressed the need to listen to women in order to find means to address serious problems in a holistic way and to sensitize men to the importance of gender equality and women's empowerment. Furthermore, the importance of implementing existing international conventions, including on biological diversity and climate change, in a gender-sensitive manner, was accentuated. Participants underscored the importance of including a gender perspective in all international processes, especially in the preparations, work and outcome of the forthcoming World Summit on Sustainable Development, which provides an opportunity to create conditions for sustainable development and the mitigation of disasters, as well as in the review of the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World.

Statements by members of the Commission on the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women

1. At its 15th (closed) meeting, on 25 March, during the course of its deliberations on the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women, the Commission, by a vote of 25 to 10, with 1 abstention, upheld a ruling by the Chairperson regarding action to be taken.
2. Statements made by some members of the Commission are therefore reproduced below, at the request of those delegations.

Statement in explanation of vote by Ambassador Zhang Yishan of the Chinese delegation regarding the motion by Malaysia

I deeply regret the vote that has just taken place. With the expenditure of a little more effort and negotiation, we could have obtained a better result than a vote. The Chinese delegation supports the motion put forward by the representative of Malaysia and harbours serious reservations concerning the Chairman's package proposal.

The Chinese delegation has carefully read the report of the Working Group on Communications to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-sixth session. In our view, this report does not objectively reflect the cooperative attitude of and detailed responses to communications provided by the Government of the country concerned; moreover, it summarizes random occurrences as general trends. This approach is bound to have a negative influence on the work of this Commission. We hope that this problem can be resolved in the course of the Commission's future work.

During the forty-sixth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Chinese delegation has actively and conscientiously participated in the consideration of the report and has made specific proposals for its amendment. It is regrettable that these suggestions have not been accepted.

The vote I just cast is meant to imply three things:

1. Support for the proposal by the representative of Malaysia;
2. Disapproval of the Chairman's package proposal;
3. Opposition to the report of the Working Group on Communications.

I should like to request that my statement be included in the report of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Statement of Cuba

We would like to thank you, first of all, for your efforts to have the Commission on the Status of Women deal satisfactorily with the problem before it.

We nevertheless voted in favour of the proposal of Malaysia on the understanding that it would reinforce the right of the Commission to comment on the report of the Working Group on Communications.

On this occasion, the Commission did not consider the report in full but only as far as paragraph 4. The members of the Commission were thus unable to exercise their right to make a proper examination.

In the past year, as in earlier years, only after studying and considering the report of the Working Group on Communications thoroughly did the Commission include it in its own report for submission to the Economic and Social Council for its approval. My delegation would have liked to have seen the same procedure followed.

We would also like to point out that a significant number of delegations wished to complete consideration of the report, while others did not. Unfortunately, the approach taken was to allow those delegations with certain problems to express their observations and opinions.

We regret that consensus could not be reached on such a sensitive issue. We hope that in the coming year the Commission will be able to consider the report in full and adopt its decisions in its customary manner.

Statement of Indonesia

My delegation takes the floor in order to offer an explanation of its vote on the position on communications to the Economic and Social Council.

Indonesia has decided to vote yes, as it is our view that the proposal to thoroughly consider the report of the Working Group would conform to the guidelines established for the work of the Commission on this important matter before us.

It is our hope that in the future we will have the proper and appropriate procedure, so that the Commission will be in a position to adopt a consensus decision on this important question that facilitates the channel of communications.

Statement of the Islamic Republic of Iran

The delegation of the Islamic Republic of Iran voted in favour of the appeal made by the delegation of Malaysia containing the reservation and objection of Malaysia to the proposal of the Chair on the report of the Working Group on Communications. This affirmative vote is due to the following:

1. The Commission on the Status of Women at its current session (forty-sixth) was unable to discuss the bulk of the report of the Working Group and the discussions and negotiations left unfinished before reaching any consensus on the whole text. Under these circumstances, any reference by the Commission to the report of the Working Group as “revised” does not correspond to reality.

2. No communication from the 1503 procedure should be considered as a basis for the conclusions supposed to be elaborated by the Working Group. The current practice of the sharing of information and communications between the Commission on the Status of Women and the 1503 procedure is not expected under the present resolutions of the Economic and Social Council.

3. According to the provisions of the existing resolutions, including Council resolution 1983/27, the Working Group is mandated with the task of “indicating the categories in which communications are most frequently submitted to the Commission”. Hence there is no legal basis, in our view, for the Working Group to “express its concern” or to “note” the violations of human rights based on the communications forwarded to the Commission on the Status of Women, as the information received corresponds only to the allegations accompanied by replies from Governments.

4. According to Council resolution 1983/27, the Working Group is mandated with the task of bringing to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women those communications “which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested injustice and discriminatory practices against women” in the form of “categories of communications”. There are instances in the report of the Working Group where the conclusion is drawn solely on the basis of just one communication on an isolated case in one country to which the concerned Government replied in detail. These kinds of communications clearly do not constitute any “trend” or “pattern” as stipulated in the pertinent resolutions, including resolution 1983/27.

5. The inclusion of the report of the Working Group in the report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council is neither obligatory nor expected, as the Working Group on Communications is a subsidiary body of the Commission on the Status of Women and its reports are addressed to it. It is only the Commission on the Status of Women that, on the basis of the report of the Working Group, may decide to make recommendations to its parent body, the Economic and Social Council. The practice of automatic transmission of the report of the Working Group to the Council is a wrong innovation.

The delegation of the Islamic Republic of Iran, while extending its sincere appreciation to the Chairperson, Ambassador Othman Jerandi of Tunisia, for his able leadership, hard work and the dedication, hopes that the Commission on the Status of Women would be able, at its forty-seventh session to reach consensus on the very important report of the Working Group so that the Council can take an appropriate action on the trends of communications on the rights of women within its mandate.

Statement of disassociation submitted by Malaysia

My delegation would like to request the statement we are about to make be officially recorded and submitted as part of the report of the Commission to the Economic and Social Council.

My delegation disassociates itself from the decision of the Commission to reproduce the text of the report of the Working Group on Communications and to make it part of the recommendations the Commission is to submit to the Economic and Social Council on what action to take, as provided in paragraph 5 of Council resolution 1983/27.

Before discussing the report of the Working Group itself, my delegation would like to state that the list of communications prepared by the secretariat and forwarded to the Commission is legally flawed. Seventeen out of the total number of 23 communications listed are inadmissible, and should not be considered by the Working Group. The seventeen communications are those transmitted to the secretariat of the Commission on the Status of Women by the secretariat of the Commission on Human Rights, and are communications received by the latter under the 1503 procedure.

As the Commission is well aware, since 2000, there have been lengthy discussions both in this Commission and in the Commission on Human Rights on the illegality of the transmission of 1503 communications to this Commission. This discussion has not concluded, and until such time it has, the Working Group of the Commission on the Status of Women should not be made privy, much less consider, the 1503 communications.

Regrettably, despite concerns raised by many delegations, those communications were submitted to the Working Group, which proceeded to consider them and subsequently made a finding.

As is clearly provided for in paragraphs 4 (a) and (b) of the Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/27, the function of the Working Group is to consider all communications and replies from Governments with a view to bringing to the attention of the Commission those communications which reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested injustices and discriminatory practices against women and to prepare a report which will indicate the categories in which communications are most frequently submitted to the Commission.

Studying the report prepared by the Working Group, it becomes very clear that it has failed to fulfil its task, in the following areas:

- i. It has not brought to the attention of the Commission communications which reveal a consistent pattern of injustices;

- ii. It failed to consider the question of reliable attestation to any of the allegations, a concern raised by many delegations both during the open debate on the communications procedure of the Commission on the Status of Women as well as during the closed session to consider the communications; and
- iii. The report failed to indicate any category in which communications are frequently received.

Having failed to discern any trend or pattern emerging from the list of communications received, the Working Group should, by right, indicate as much in their report. However, the current Working Group before the forty-sixth session of the Commission has taken it upon itself to extend its mandate and to “note” the violations of the rights of women in different regions around the world, regardless of the fact that the individual cases, when considered together as a whole, do not point to a consistent pattern of injustices. The Working Group had failed to fulfil any of the three criteria provided in operative paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1983/27.

My delegation is of the view that the report prepared by the Working Group, with all its shortcomings, should nonetheless be examined by the Commission, as provided in operative paragraph 5 of Council resolution 1983/27, with a view to making recommendations to the Council, which would then decide what action may appropriately be taken on the emerging patterns of communications.

Bearing in mind that the Working Group has failed to point to an emerging pattern of communications, the Commission would, by logical sequence/conclusion, not be able to make any recommendations to the Economic and Social Council in this regard.

Having said this, my delegation feels that a general recommendation for human rights education to be carried out in sensitizing officials in “sensitive” areas of work is a good one, and could/should be made by the Commission to the Economic and Social Council. In this regard, paragraph 11 of the report of the Working Group could serve as a basis for such a recommendation.

Reservation entered by Pakistan

My delegation did not support the proposal to include the report of the Working Group on Communications in the report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council. We did so because we consider the proposal in violation of Council resolution 1983/27.

May I remind the Commission the report of the Working Group is to be examined by the Commission to formulate its recommendations to the Economic and Social Council. Paragraph 5 of Council resolution 1983/27 requires, and I quote, “the Commission on the Status of Women to examine the report of the Working Group and to avoid duplication of the work undertaken by other organs of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission being in this respect empowered only to make recommendations to the Council, which shall then decide what action may appropriately be taken on the emerging trends and pattern of communications". The report of the Working Group was never fully examined by the Commission. The Commission did not complete even one reading of the report. As the distinguished delegates who attended the forty-fifth session of the Commission on the Status of Women last year will kindly recall, the Commission had not only examined the report of its Working Group but had also made substantial amendments and only then adopted it and included it in its report to the Council. The report however, did not elicit any recommendation. This year the Commission did not have the opportunity to examine the report of the Working Group.

Paragraphs 4 (a) and (b) of Council resolution 1983/27 oblige the Working Group to bring to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women communications which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of reliably attested discriminatory practices and to prepare a report indicating categories in which communications are most frequently submitted. The report of the Working Group did neither of these. It did not identify communications revealing consistent patterns of discriminatory practices. We also did not find any category indicated in which communications are most frequently submitted. Reliable attestation of discriminatory practices too had not been done.

In view of these factors we do not consider it appropriate to include the report of the Working Group in the report of the Commission to the Economic and Social Council. The resolution of the Economic and Social Council governing the functions and interaction between the Council and the Commission and between the Commission and its Working Group do not require reproduction of the report of the Working Group in the Commission's report to the Council.

To conclude, ours is a position of principle. We have always upheld the supremacy of rules and regulations and procedures agreed by the Member States. We cannot be a party to transgression of mandate and violation of rules. We have therefore voted in favour of the point of order made by Malaysia and against the proposal of including the report of the Working Group in the report of the Commission to the Economic and Social Council.

Statement of the Republic of Korea

My delegation would like to add its voice to those of the other delegations that have expressed full support for the manner in which you have brought this very difficult issue to a closure. Given the sensitivities involved, given the differing views of the delegations, and given all the time we have spent considering the matter, your ruling, though perhaps not to the satisfaction of all delegations, was, I believe, the wisest way to bring this matter to closure. Many delegations have spoken about the limited time we had to consider the report of the Working Group. But we spent much more than the time initially allocated to the consideration of the report, two whole sessions and many more hours, not to mention the many hours you, Mr. Chairman, spent in bilateral consultations with the interested delegations. We must remember that time is limited. On no issue do we have an indefinite amount of time. The key is to make effective use of the time given to us. On this point, if I may try to end things on a hopeful note, may I remind delegations that we now have a decision for an early appointment of the membership of the Working Group, so that the Group will have more time to work and be able to submit its report to the Commission well in advance of its consideration, giving delegations much more time to consider the report before coming to the closed meeting for its consideration. Hopefully, the new method will enhance effectiveness of the Working Group and our consideration of its report.

Statement of the Sudan

First of all let me commend your efforts to bring about a consensus on this issue. Allow me also to make it absolutely clear that we support what was said by the delegation of Malaysia because our understanding was not to challenge the ruling of the Chair, but to allow more time to consider the issues, as Malaysia has proposed. My delegation also subscribes to what was stated by the delegations of the Islamic Republic of Iran, the United Republic of Tanzania and Cuba.

My delegation regrets that it finds itself in a situation where the Commission is obliged to challenge the ruling of the Chair, a matter that does not usually take place in the Commission on the Status of Women, which usually concludes its business in a very positive manner.

The main problem we are faced with today and which led to this sad situation is caused by:

1. The inability of the Commission to complete the revision of the report of the Working Group on Communications, as stipulated in relevant mandates and as was the practice in previous sessions.
2. The lack of time, which was exhausted in procedural discussion as well as on substantive matters.

It is the view of my delegation that the Commission, under your able leadership succeeded in adopting two agreed conclusions on the two thematic issues of the current session, in addition to adopting many substantive resolutions, as well as procedural ones. We are confirming this fact because we believe that the report of the Working Group on Communications, should be given enough time that is necessary for each and every Member State to be satisfied with it before its final adoption. In this connection, the Commission would have been in a better situation now if a decision on this report is put off until all outstanding issues are resolved. The Commission has done so in the past, and in the latest session it has put off discussion on its working methods.

Whatever action the Commission has taken now, my delegation, as a matter of principle, cannot tolerate the notion that the consensus of a given Member State will not be taken on board due to the shortage of time while the opportunity is available for that. Furthermore, my delegation will not allow this situation to be repeated in future sessions, which will undoubtedly constitute a serious obstacle to the work of this important Commission.

We would also pose this question after today's vote: How will the Commission deal with this matter at its next session. We need to be absolutely clear on this and we hope that delegations here will have an answer.
