The Secretary-General has received the following written statement which is circulated in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1296 (XLIV).

[30 March 1998]

Statement on Iran

1. A review of the situation in Iran in the past year shows that despite tremendous propaganda, the human rights situation has not improved and in some areas it has, in fact, deteriorated. The State media has reported 200 executions in public in 1997, twice the number in the previous year, 138 of which during Khatami's tenure. The real number of secret executions is much higher.

2. At least seven persons, four of them women, have been stoned to death in public since Khatami's presidency. On 26 October 1997, the Associated Press reported the stoning to death of six persons, in Sari, the capital of northern province of Mazandaran. The stoning to death of six persons in one day is unprecedented.

3. As the United Nations Special Representative on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran pointed out in his report to the General Assembly, October 1997 (A/52/472), this savage form of atrocity continues in Iran unabated. Citing article 82 (b) of the regime's law that sanctions it, he described such a sentence as a cruel inhuman or degrading punishment.

4. Khatami's ascension to power has made no difference in the daily plight of Iranian women. The Iranian regime's refusal to join the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women on the pretext that "the Convention's underlying spirit" which calls for equality of men and women is against the fundamentals of the regime, vividly shows this regime's incompatibility with international mechanisms and norms. This decision was made by the Supreme Council of Cultural Revolution headed by Khatami.

5. Agence France Presse (AFP) reported on 30 November 1997 that Iranian security forces arrested a large number of women for improper veiling or attires that were not compatible with Islamic regulations. The AFP correspondent witnessed in northern Tehran security forces forcing many young women into patrol cars.

6. In March 1998, in a 395 page document released by the court of Berlin 11 months after the conclusion of the "trial, which lasted for three and a half years, the judges concluded that the leadership of the Iranian Government ... not only approves the execution of terrorist assassinations abroad but carries them out against individuals who are considered non-desirable only because of their political positions."

7. The mullahs have stepped up their activities to export fundamentalism and terrorism. The Associated Press reported on 9 January 1998 that the assassination of dissidents has increased in recent months. According to the National Council of Resistance of Iran, 24 dissidents have been assassinated during Khatami's presidency. In early February 1998, the mullahs' regime gathered its agents from 80 countries under the guise of the Global Assembly of Ahl Al-Bait, and Khamenei, Khatami and Rafsanjani met them.

8. On the ninth anniversary of the fatwa against Salman Rusdie, in an unprecedented onslaught since the issuing of the death sentence, the regime's most senior officials, including the Prosecutor General, the Speaker of Majlis (Parliament), the Foreign Ministry spokesman and the Revolutionary Guards Corps reiterated the need to carry out the fatwa. The head of 15th of Khordad Foundation, that has placed $2.5 million bounty on Rushdie's head, announced that the bounty could increase "according to the time when the fatwa is carried out." He reiterated that all of the regime's leaders, including Mohammad Khatami, have agreed on the need to carry out the verdict against Salman Rusdie.

9. Despite pervasive repression, popular uprisings, student demonstrations and labour strikes against the regime as a whole, have shown a dramatic increase in recent months, signaling an explosive state of affairs. Two major demonstrations in the east and west of Tehran, respectively on 19 August and 19 November, were brutally suppressed and scores of people were arrested. Their fate remains unknown.

10. Extensive clashes between the Revolutionary Guards Corps and the people in Neyriz (Fars Province) on 15 August, and in Isfahan (Central Iran) on 7, 11 and 12 November and Anar (Kerman Province south of Iran) from 30 January to 1 February 1998, have taken place. Demonstration of 2,500 students on 7 November in Kazeroon University, sit-in by more than 2,000 students on 10 and 11 September in Mashhad's Ferdowsi University, strike by 10,000 workers at the Tehran National Industry in late January, and by thousands of workers at Jahan-Chit factory in Karaj on 28 December were suppressed by the Revolutionary Guards Corps and agents of the Ministry of Intelligence.

11. On 4 January 1998, following an anti-government demonstration by more than 3,000 Tehran University students, the mullahs' Ministry of Intelligence arrested at least 116 of them. Their fate is also unknown.

12. Ascension to presidency of Khatami, who was a Khomeini regime's minister for 10 years, has not made any difference on the human rights situation. The events of recent months clearly prove this reality. To this effect, the regime's president refrained from meeting in Tehran Ms. Mary Robinson, the High Commissioner for Human Rights because she wanted to raise her concerns on the human rights situation in Iran.

13. Condemnation of violation of human rights in Iran and its worsening trend which has been stipulated in resolution 52/142 of the United Nations General Assembly of 12 December 1997, and resolution of the European Parliament of 20 February 1998 illustrate the international concern over this matter.

14. The experience of the past decade and the regime's complete ignoring of 41 resolutions of condemnation by various organs of the United Nations prove the fact that pinning any hope on reform by this regime is nothing but a mirage and does not help the human rights situation in Iran at all. Such a placating policy only emboldens the mullahs in continuing suppression and terrorism.

15. The only appropriate response of the Commission to the behaviour of the mullahs' regime vis-à-vis the most fundamental rights of the Iranian people and international rules and regulations of human rights is to adopt a firm policy without any political and economic considerations. This would entail passing a strong resolution which includes the above-mentioned cases of violations of human rights in Iran.
