I. Introduction

1. This second report was prepared six months after the initial progress report of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in Burundi (PBC/2/BDI/10); it describes progress made during the period July-December 2008 and the remaining challenges to peacebuilding in the next five months, including the recommendations which emerged as a result of the review of the first progress report.

2. As in the previous report, all stakeholders members of the Monitoring and Tracking Mechanism of the Strategic Framework, including civil society, women's organizations, the private sector, political parties, religious communities, the Bashingantahe institution, the United Nations system and bilateral and multilateral partners, under the leadership of the Government, with technical support from the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB), were also involved in the preparation of the report. Work on the report started late and stakeholder participation was limited. Some inputs were provided after the initial draft of the report had been completed, complicating the finalization of the report.

3. While stakeholders had been heavily involved in the preparation of the initial report, securing a similar level of involvement proved a challenge during the critical period from December 2008 to January 2009. Some stakeholders provided their inputs only after the first draft of the report had been considered by the Strategic Forum. Even though attempts were made to facilitate the process based on the lessons learned from the initial report, including by assigning a consultant to the working groups to consolidate their inputs, the level of involvement fell short of the requirement of a participatory and inclusive process. Despite the efforts of all concerned, the Strategic Framework is yet to be fully understood as a tool for political dialogue. The very usefulness of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission is questioned in some quarters.

4. This report indicates the progress made and challenges ahead and considers prospects for enhanced dialogue and national and international partnership on issues relating to peacebuilding in Burundi.

5. The report contains three main parts:

(a) Analysis of the trends and an evaluation of progress and challenges in relation to the five priority areas and three cross-cutting issues: (i) promotion of good governance; (ii) Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL; (iii) security sector; (iv) justice, promotion of human rights and action to combat impunity; (v) the land issue and socio-economic recovery; (vi) mobilization and coordination of international assistance; (vii) the subregional dimension; and (viii) the gender dimension;

(b) Assessment of the mutual commitments as defined in the Strategic Framework;

(c) Conclusion and a number of recommendations to stakeholders focusing on the most critical requirements in the coming five months.

II. Analysis of trends and review of progress

A. Promotion of good governance

Political governance

6. The cabinet has remained largely unchanged, which suggests enhanced political partnership, with Government Decree No. 100/149 of 10 September 2008 delineating the roles and responsibilities of ministers and vice-ministers having substantially resolved conflicts over mandates.

7. The deadlock in Parliament was ended when 22 dissident Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD-FDD) members of Parliament were replaced following a ruling by the Constitutional Court. Despite the controversies touched off by that ruling, the June and October 2008 sessions proceeded normally.

8. Ministry of Interior and Communal Development Ordinance No. 530/1022 of 6 October 2008 regulating meetings and activities of political parties and associations had been challenged as a violation of the freedom of assembly. However, the changes introduced thereto by Ordinance No. 530/1208 of the Ministry of the Interior of 18 November 2008, with the further relaxation of the rules governing the holding of public meetings, were welcomed by many stakeholders. Those amendments notwithstanding, some political parties and civil society organizations still face difficulties in trying to organize meetings.

9. The dialogue among national partners has continued, with representatives of political parties, civil society and other socio-political categories being involved in discussions on the challenges of and requirements for building lasting peace in Burundi,¹ despite some tension and disagreements. One of the recommendations from the dialogue, the establishment of a standing forum of political parties, is under implementation.

10. The Government has begun taking steps to establish an independent national electoral commission, which should be in place soon if there are no obstacles.

11. The above-mentioned progress notwithstanding, some actors feel that the political dialogue has not gone far enough and fear that the Government might still take important decisions without consulting all stakeholders. For instance, some politicians and members of society have expressed concern that the Government would set up a non-independent national electoral commission without consulting its political partners as to the membership of such commission, which might lead to a further deterioration of the socio-political climate in the country, particularly since there are now politically motivated incidents, and cases of the premises of some political parties being set ablaze.

12. Special attention also needs to be paid to the integration of women into institutions. Although women's representation in the highest institutions of Government has remained steady, the absence of women among the three top positions of the executive branch and the failure to meet the agreed quota of 30 per cent in women's representation in public service shows that gender has not been fully taken into account in public policies and programmes.

¹ Four sessions were organised for political parties ; they were attended by 141 people, including 37 women (26.2 per cent). Two sessions were held for 111 representatives of media organizations and 29 other sessions for 961 civil society representatives, 45.7 per cent of whom were women.

Administrative governance

13. The implementation of the decentralization policy has continued with provincial consultations among elected officials at the national and local levels, the establishment of a Burundian association of local elected officials and the development of a national decentralization policy and a three-year plan. Several political and legislative initiatives are under way with a view to enhancing the capacity of decentralized administrative entities. These initiatives demonstrate the willingness of the Government and its partners to increase transparency and local participation and ensure that greater attention is paid to specific local interests in governance. However, particular attention needs to be paid to the instability at the level of commune administration, with numerous commune administration officials being dismissed.

14. There were more strikes in the second half of 2008, which brought into the open the disparate conditions obtaining in various sectors of the civil service. Several categories of civil servants have denounced the disparities between the salaries paid to members of the military, police and the judiciary as opposed to their unfavourable conditions of service.

15. Although there is legislation defining political and substantive positions, appointments are still a result of political patronage. Furthermore, it is critical that salaries should be realigned as part of a sound wage policy so as to minimize the impact of strikes on key sectors, such as the health sector, as occurred during the period under review.

Economic governance

16. Economic governance has improved. The public at large approved of the handling of the oil crisis, as reflected in the Government's decision to reduce fuel prices after the decline in prices on the world market, in the face of fierce opposition from oil companies.

17. Progress has also been made in the processing of cases of misappropriation of funds during the reporting period. The fact that 173 cases were referred to the Office of the Prosecutor as compared to 43 cases during the previous period is also a positive development. In addition, more cases are under review, the number having increased from 57 during the first half of the year to 180 during the period under review.

18. Concerns have been expressed in some quarters over the handling of some cases of misappropriation of funds, including the illegal sale of the Falcon 50 presidential jet and the Interpetrol oil company. It is worth noting that such cases are under judicial review.

19. Much remains to be done in the area of economic governance. There is political will but more action needs to be taken. In addition, some observers fear that the recent Public Finance Act (Act No. 1/35 of 4 December 2008), under which the State Inspector General reports directly to the President of the Republic, may undermine the independent and apolitical nature of the work carried out by the Office of the State Inspector General.

20. With respect to good governance, the other issue of concern is the equitable allocation of national resources. The national budget for 2009 highlights the imbalances between the operating budgets of certain political bodies and those of the social ministries.

B. Ceasefire agreement between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL

21. During the reporting period and following the Ngozi Declaration of 29 August 2008, regular meetings were held between the President of the Republic, Pierre Nkurunziza, and the leader of Palipehutu-FNL, Agathon Rwaswa. These meetings advanced the dialogue on outstanding issues and obstacles to the peace process.

22. There were no major ceasefire violations following the Ngozi Declaration. However, Palipehutu-FNL has often been accused of continuing to recruit soldiers, seizing supplies from civilians, committing acts of violence, and allowing its combatants to move about in uniform. Despite the efforts of all stakeholders, the children associated with the party had not been released at the time of writing. Furthermore, the National Defence Force (FDN) has often been accused of carrying out acts of aggression against Palipehutu-FNL combatants and of arresting party supporters.

23. The implementation of the commitments undertaken by the parties was considerably delayed owing to the three-month break in the work of the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism (MCVS) from September to November 2008. However, work resumed on 16 December 2008, following the holding of a Summit of Heads of State and Government in Bujumbura on 4 December 2008 under the auspices of the Regional Initiative for Peace. This Summit has ushered in a new era in which significant progress has been made with respect to the logistical preparations for the assembly areas for combatants² and the resolution of contentious issues, including the renaming of Palipehutu-FNL, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the release of political prisoners, the separation of children associated with the party, and the integration of FNL into political institutions and into the security and defence forces.

24. At the time of writing, the Government had released 118 Palipehutu-FNL political prisoners and prisoners of war, who are now in the Rubira assembly area. On 9 January 2009, Palipehutu-FNL changed its name in accordance with the commitments made under the Declaration of the Summit of Heads of State and Government of 4 December 2008 and constitutional requirements prohibiting political party names with an ethnic connotation. The party is now called the "Forces nationales de libération-FNL".

25. The South African Facilitation and the Joint Mechanism continued to monitor the process with a view to implementing in January 2009 the other commitments, especially those relating to the integration of FNL into national institutions, its registration as a political party and the start of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. However, the assembly of combatants had only just begun at the time of writing.

C. Security sector

26. The security situation has improved, especially following the end of fighting between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL. International support for the security sector, including through the implementation of legal, institutional, strategic and operational frameworks for the fight against the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, has established a safe environment for communities. Support has also been provided for the strengthening of the operational capacities of the police force and the Office of the Inspectorate General of Police, the return of soldiers to their barracks, the professionalization of the National Intelligence Service, and the strengthening of the parliamentary monitoring commission.

27. Searches of homes for firearms owned by civilians continued in the capital, Bujumbura, and in other parts of the country, resulting in the collection and destruction of approximately 6,000 firearms by the National Defence Force and the Burundi National Police. Although the programme for the disarmament of the civilian population had not been officially launched, these searches have dissuaded civilians from owning or distributing firearms and have thus promoted security. Furthermore, approximately 200,000 m² of arable land was demined and 6,980 explosive devices were destroyed in 99 per cent of the suspected mined areas identified throughout the country.

28. The Government also established a National Security Council and security committees in all districts of the country with a view to involving all citizens in the efforts to promote security.

29. Training workshops were organized for the security and defence forces in a bid to make them more professional and efficient. These training activities show the commitment of the Government and partners to enhance the capacities of these forces to fight crime effectively and meet the needs of the people.³ There has been a marked improvement in the accountability of the National Defence Force, while progress has yet to be made by the Burundi National Police.

30. Efforts to confine FDN soldiers to their barracks and ensure that they upheld standards of morality continued in the second half of 2008. It is estimated that 714 (71.4 per cent) of the 995 people identified as vulnerable received assistance that enabled them to leave their barracks in a dignified manner. As a result of the rehabilitation of barracks carried out with the assistance of the Peacebuilding Fund (PBF) and the Netherlands, 12,500 FDN soldiers who had been residing among the civilian population have returned to their barracks. Soldiers from 17 barracks were provided with the revised standard instruction programme for further learning.⁴ The

⁴ See Peacebuilding Fund projects on confining FDN soldiers to barracks and ensuring that they uphold standards of morality.

Government intends to build on these achievements through the establishment of a comprehensive security reform project.

31. Burundi has continued to contribute troops to peacekeeping operations in countries such as Somalia, the Sudan and Côte d'Ivoire. This is an efficient way of enhancing the professionalism of its security and defence forces. Security officers who participate in these peacekeeping operations acquire the technical expertise and experience that will allow them to provide better security for the country and its citizens upon their return. The fact that no Burundian troops have been implicated in cases of misconduct in the receiving countries further testifies to the positive impact of the training activities on Burundian troops.

32. The multi-country demobilization and reintegration programme ended on 31 December 2008. However, the World Bank has provided additional financial support of $10 million under the Country Assistance Strategy to fund the demobilization of FNL combatants, pending the establishment of a relevant Government management body. In view of the vast scope of the programme, many challenges remain and the continued international financial support will be required.

33. As part of their efforts in support of security sector reform, some European Commission member States, and Norway and Switzerland will continue to support the demobilization of other elements of the security and defence forces with a view to downsizing the police force by 15,000 and the army by 25,000, thus reducing the burden on the national budget.

34. The holding of various subregional meetings has also contributed to improved cooperation among the security forces of the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) and the East African Community (EAC). The engagement of several partners, including the Executive Secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region and the Tripartite Plus One Commission, has contributed to improved relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the three other countries — Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi — and represented an important step towards implementation of concrete measures to enhance security in a subregion often characterized by the cross-border movements of criminal groups.

35. Despite all these efforts, there was persistent criminal activity during the reporting period: acts of armed banditry, killings to settle scores, robberies and rape continued at an alarming rate.⁵ There was also a large number of crimes related to land disputes.

D. Justice, the promotion of human rights and action to combat impunity

36. The Government is committed to fighting impunity. To the satisfaction of Burundi's citizens and human rights activists, the Musinga massacre case was brought to trial in October 2008. While welcoming progress already made, observers are calling for more efforts to identify the perpetrators of such crimes and prosecute the other cases of human rights abuses, including those committed at Kinama (Bujumbura Mairie) and Gatumba.

⁵ Police statistics show that the monthly crime rate for January to June 2008 was 975, whereas for July to November 2008 it rose to 1,225.

37. The adoption of the draft revised penal code by the National Assembly in November 2008 was another significant step forward in the efforts to combat impunity for crimes committed in Burundi. The revised draft Penal Code was prepared with the support of national and international partners, and contains major improvements, including the abolition of the death penalty and the criminalization of torture, genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and gender-based violence. However, some of the provisions of the revised draft Penal Code have continued to cause controversy, especially the provisions on domestic violence, which becomes an offence only when the victim files a complaint, and on the criminalization of homosexuality. These provisions, which may be questionable under international law, will be discussed at length in the Senate. Following the adoption of the draft revised penal code, the Code of Penal Procedure needs to be revised as a matter of priority.

38. During the reporting period, the process of setting up mechanisms of transitional justice was considerably delayed. This report was prepared after the signing of a Peacebuilding Fund project entitled “Support for the national consultations on the setting up/establishment of mechanisms of transitional justice in Burundi” by the Government and the United Nations in June 2008 and the subsequent adoption of a timetable for six months of national consultations, scheduled to begin in March 2009.

39. Preparations for the national consultations are well under way, with information and awareness-raising campaigns being conducted for civil society, religious communities, the Bashingantahe institution, youth and media representatives, who will have a role to play throughout the process. These preparations must take into account potential risk factors, including political manipulation and interference in the election campaign for the 2010 elections.

40. In order to promote the satisfactory administration of justice, a large-scale programme was implemented to enforce existing court judgements and a number of field visits to courts and prosecution services were carried out to establish the grounds for pending cases (notification and enforcement of judgements and decisions). Between June and December 2008, 1,855 cases were completed (and closed) and 1,945 notifications were issued. In order to prepare for implementation of this programme, 550 magistrates and registrars throughout the country were provided with training on drafting techniques, methods of enforcing judgements and decisions, and the incorporation of gender equality into the reform of the judiciary. However, it is still necessary to update the rules concerning the enforcement of judgements and revise the Code of Penal Procedure.

41. In order to improve access to justice, and in accordance with the policy of the Ministry of Justice, 32 local courts have already been built as part of a joint community justice project between the Government, the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB) and the European Commission. Within the framework of the strengthening of community justice, 16 of the 17 planned local courts have been built and are being equipped by BINUB with the financial assistance of the Peacebuilding Fund and Luxembourg. The Government itself has built 17 courts. The European Commission has already started building 20 courts and rehabilitating 26 others.

42. Capacity-building activities for legal professionals have also continued: 1,076 magistrates were offered an ethics training course comprising 19 sessions at provincial headquarters throughout the country. Furthermore, court management training was provided to 12 national training officers, who were then able to train 205 chief prosecutors, judges, registrars and clerks, and this has improved the technical skills and performance of members of the judiciary.

43. The juvenile justice training provided to 12 instructors of magistrates, 17 social workers and 16 judicial police officers in December 2008 helped establish a network of professionals capable of training colleagues and laying the foundations for the establishment of a juvenile justice system in Burundi.

44. The justice sector has also received strong support from partners, who are eager to build on the results of justice sector support projects funded by the Peacebuilding Fund in Burundi and to support the Government's new justice sector reform programme.

45. During the reporting period, the Government and its partners also made progress with respect to the establishment of an independent national human rights commission. The Government adopted the draft law on the organization and functioning of the commission. The next steps in the process are the adoption of this draft law by Parliament and the actual establishment of the commission. However, concerns have been raised by some stakeholders, including civil society organizations, regarding non-compliance with the Principles relating to the Status of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (the Paris Principles), adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993. Non-compliance with the Paris Principles would make it difficult for the commission to attract funding from donors, including the disbursement of funds from the Peacebuilding Fund.

46. During the reporting period, Burundi was considered at the third session of the universal periodic review mechanism at the United Nations Human Rights Council in Geneva, in the presence of civil society representatives working in the area of the promotion and protection of human rights. The Government accepted most of the Council's recommendations and undertook to consider the rest.

47. Several activities were implemented under the integrated strategy to combat sexual violence and abuse of women and children, including training workshops and awareness-raising campaigns for communities (mainly secondary schools) aimed at enhancing prevention efforts at the community level. The apparent decrease in the incidence of rape and sexual violence⁶ during the reporting period seems to suggest that this strategy has been successful.

48. Despite the efforts of the Government and other stakeholders, human rights violations have continued. In the prison system, there are still instances of illegal or arbitrary detention, failure to separate minors from adults and keep records of persons in police custody or detention, and poor conditions of detention.

49. Human rights activists in Burundi and abroad have accused State bodies of violating the right to freedom and security of person. In particular, they denounce violations of freedom of expression, assembly and association as evidenced by the imprisonment of some leaders of trade unions, associations, media outlets and political parties. Other stakeholders, mindful of the problems involved in establishing punishment and reparation mechanisms for past crimes, have expressed concerns over the effectiveness of the current law enforcement bodies.

50. In addition to existing forms of violence, the persecution of albinos by cross-border criminals in the eastern provinces of the country dominated the headlines during the last four months of 2008. Although awareness-raising campaigns have been successful, this new phenomenon remains a cause for concern.⁷

E. Land issue and economic recovery

51. Significant progress was made in finding sustainable solutions to land issues in the second half of 2008. An inter-ministerial technical committee, in which donors were allowed to participate, was established by a decree issued by the Office of the Second Vice-President to prepare a land policy paper, which was adopted on 15 September 2008 at a workshop jointly sponsored by the European Commission, the Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). This key coordination forum for early recovery and development in the context of reintegration is chaired by the Minister for National Solidarity, Human Rights and Gender. The adopted policy paper comprises four strategic areas: (1) revision of the Land Tenure Code, (2) restructuring and modernization of land registration services, (3) decentralization of land management, and (4) development of long-term solutions to the problem of landless individuals and the small size of plots.

52. Similarly, this coordinated approach has facilitated revision of the 1986 Land Tenure Code, following national consultations in August 2008. The draft code was presented to the public on 27 November 2008 at a workshop presided over by the President, and introduces various innovations relating to the decentralization of land registration services, an enhanced role for local authorities with regard to security of tenure, clarification of the status of lands worked by farmers, and the establishment of a national commission on land tenure.

53. The question of access by women to land through inheritance is not dealt with in the proposed Land Tenure Code, but is covered in the bill on inheritance, matrimonial regimes and gifts, the drafting and adoption of which have been delayed as a result of widespread opposition and disputes.

54. In the context of the strategic quest for long-term solutions to the problem of landless individuals and the small size of lots, a question of particular importance in view of the repatriation of Burundians from the United Republic of Tanzania, on 4 August 2008 an integrated rural villages strategy in respect of landless returnees was adopted by the Ad Hoc Integrated Commission on Repatriation and Reintegration. This multi-sectoral, village-based strategy encourages the establishment of villages to house mixed populations on a voluntary basis as a contribution to the consolidation of peace and the creation of development centres in rural areas.

55. The integrated villages programme promotes access to land by women from vulnerable host populations and groups of returnees. Three pilot villages in

Makamba and Rutana provinces have been established since November 2008. The European Commission and the Danish International Development Agency have indicated their interest and support for this approach.

56. With regard to land disputes, the funding provided by the Peacebuilding Fund for the National Commission on Land and Other Assets (CNTB) in 2007-2008 has allowed the Commission to strengthen its capacities and to record 10,461 land disputes, of which it has settled 3,389, or 32.4 per cent, compared with 6.5 per cent in the previous half year, through awareness-raising and a peaceful settlement procedure. In a valuable contribution to the consolidation of peace, the Commission ratified over 400 amicable settlements, compared with 302 in the previous half year. Civil society, in particular the Bashingantahe institution, has also contributed to the mediation of land disputes.

57. The gender issue was incorporated only late in its activities by the Commission, so that only a very small number of cases have been submitted by women. A bill under consideration in the National Assembly would enlarge the National Commission from 23 to 50 members, and increase its legal capacity to take binding decisions so as to end the clogging up of the judicial appeals system, even subsequent to the determination and acceptance of an amicable settlement.

58. There has also been progress in community rehabilitation initiatives, which have allowed vulnerable categories to improve their economic status, with the focus on integration and the strengthening of cohesion and peaceful coexistence at the community level within groups of young people and women. Thus, 32 community facilities have been renovated, with the participation of 3,047 young people, including 1,261 girls (41.4 per cent). This is an improvement over the previous half year, in which only two community facilities were renovated by 106 young people, with participation by girls estimated at 26.4 per cent. Many young people have also received microcredits: 3,575 this half year, compared with 248 previously. In addition, 1,253 vulnerable women have begun economic activity on the basis of direct assistance kits, compared with 993 the previous half year.⁸ A change of outlook is apparent among women who have received credits, since they had been accustomed to humanitarian assistance. It should be noted that the international community is providing support for the Government of Burundi in several income-generating and wealth-producing economic sectors (infrastructure, rural development), which is having a positive long-term effect on the consolidation of peace. The World Bank, the European Commission and Belgium, in particular, are involved in these projects.

59. Also with regard to community rehabilitation, progress in reintegration programming and planning has meant that 13 provinces have operational integrated reintegration plans. These plans provide provincial authorities with coordination tools for action and advocacy vis-à-vis partners.

60. In the context of encouraging local entrepreneurship as a contribution to the consolidation of peace, dialogue has been established between entrepreneurs and local and international actors at sales exhibitions. In addition, 10 Burundian exhibitors have participated for the first time in the Jua Kali/Nguvu Kazi exhibition in Kigali. This participation by local entrepreneurs represented a good opportunity to promote local products and develop strategic links with entrepreneurs in the subregion.

III. Assessment of mutual commitments

A. Government

61. With regard to governance, the main points of the speech given by the President of the Republic in Makamba on 27 August 2008, the third anniversary of his inauguration, clearly referred to the commitments of the Government of Burundi under the Strategic Framework. The Government has made considerable efforts to improve the institutional framework for good governance by amending laws and establishing government inspection bodies; to combat the misappropriation of funds and corruption; and to create conditions conducive to grass-roots dialogue in order to ensure that major decisions take account of the people's wishes. Senior government officials have regularly made on-the-spot visits.

62. Given its concern to promote governance based on dialogue, on 17 and 18 September 2008, the Government of Burundi, under the auspices of the President of the Republic, held a government retreat in Gitega on the theme "Improving the reform process in Burundi". Particular attention was given to priority reforms relating to the economy, social equity and international anti-corruption standards (preventive measures). With regard to transparency, a comprehensive plan to communicate Government activities, as a means of highlighting achievements and informing the public about progress made and ongoing reforms, was also formulated at the retreat.

63. The Government has also focused on creating a conducive political environment for the 2010 elections. Frameworks for dialogue have been established. Civil society, political parties and parliamentarians, in particular, have achieved significant progress in that respect. The progress made with the Palipehutu-FNL movement is also partly attributable to the Government's efforts.

64. The Government has continued to meet its commitments regarding the integration of women into national bodies and programmes, although imbalances still exist, particularly at the most senior levels of national Government.

65. With regard to rebuilding a functional public service, efforts have been made to achieve greater decentralization, while a proposed amendment to the commune administration organization Act would devolve more power to local government. There is, however, still a long way to go before Burundians view the public service as being exclusively at their service.

66. The Government maintains a firm anti-corruption stance as one of its priorities, although specific actions demonstrating its effective commitment to combating corruption and misappropriation of funds have to date been limited. The budget initially allocated to the special Anti-Corruption Brigade for the 2008 budget year could not be fully implemented, owing to a lack of funds; that has prevented the establishment of regional branches of the Brigade and in fact also hindered the activities of the anti-corruption bodies.

67. The Government has made significant strides in establishing security bodies over the last six months, including the establishment of the National Security Council. It has also reviewed the legal disarmament framework, comprising the National Commission for Civilian Disarmament and on Small Arms Proliferation.⁹ Awareness-raising campaigns have been conducted throughout the country to encourage the voluntary surrender of weapons. The defence and security forces and the territorial administration have organized joint activities with a view to enhancing cooperation between security partners.

68. Concerning the Ceasefire Agreement with Palipehutu-FNL, the Government has made considerable efforts to obtain a resumption of the work of the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism and achieve progress in the talks between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL on contentious issues. Such progress contributed to the success of the Summit of Heads of State on 4 December 2008 and the meeting in January 2009 of the Group of Special Envoys for Burundi, which culminated in the Bujumbura Declaration of 17 January 2009.

69. In the area of justice, human rights and action to combat impunity, the Government has stood by its intention to establish an enabling legislative framework for the promotion of human rights by adopting a new draft Penal Code and the independent national human rights commission organization act, spelling out the mandate, composition and functioning of that body.

70. The Ministry of Justice has responded to the need to ensure the coordination and efficiency of institutional and operational support in the Burundian justice sector by establishing a unit responsible for that function. The resumption of the process of establishing transitional justice mechanisms is also to be welcomed.

71. Efforts made in relation to the land issue and economic recovery include the adoption of a national land tenure policy paper and a Land Tenure Code, as well as the implementation of mechanisms to coordinate land dispute resolution. The Government has also adopted the Integrated Rural Villages strategy to deal with the issue of returnees and other landless citizens. Advocacy to mobilize the funds needed for community recovery has been ongoing.

B. Stakeholders

Civil society, religious communities and the Bashingantahe institution

72. Two workshops were organized, in October and December 2008 respectively, to bring together representatives of civil society in the various technical follow-up committees for Peacebuilding Fund projects and in the Strategic Framework monitoring/evaluation groups (monitoring and evaluation group and thematic working groups). The purpose of the first workshop was to analyze the effectiveness of civil society representation in those committees and groups, the systems for the operation of the technical follow-up committees, and the strategies for communication and coordination among civil society organizations. A structure was proposed and funding for its implementation is now being sought. The second workshop was intended to prepare members of civil society to take part in drafting the present report.

73. While some actions by religious communities have been welcomed as conveying cultural values that promote reconciliation, an overall assessment of the performance of civil society actors suggests that they are not living up to their commitments. A real partnership has yet to be established between the authorities and civil society organizations.

74. Civil society organizations have established a working group on transitional justice mechanisms and have organized information and awareness-raising workshops at the provincial and national levels. In that connection, provincial focal points for civil society organizations were established, in all provinces, on 5 December 2008, to work alongside representatives of the Government and the United Nations in the national consultations scheduled to begin in March 2009.

75. Civil society, religious communities and the Bashingantahe institution have participated actively in the frameworks for dialogue and have continued to advocate for greater attention to the challenges of peacebuilding in Burundi. Their opinions have always been very useful in taking forward the legislative reforms under way (revised Penal Code, establishment of the independent national human rights commission and the independent national electoral commission, etc.) and they have reported human rights violations, corruption and embezzlement.

76. Civil society, in particular the Bashingantahe institution, has continued to mediate land disputes. Civil society organizations have also taken part in the 16 Days of Activism Campaign to end violence against women and children.

77. However, the efforts of civil society have been constrained by a lack of financial resources.

Women's organizations

78. By disseminating information on the level of implementation of the Strategic Framework, women's organizations have helped the population in general, and women in particular, to take ownership of the peacebuilding process.

79. Women's organizations have continued to engage in strong advocacy with senior Government officials and donors for the establishment of a national plan to implement Security Council resolution 1325 (2000). They have also remained concerned about the issue of gender-based violence. They have helped to bring the problem to the attention of the population at large, decision-makers and the international community and, through the women police officers who are members of the coordination framework for women's peacebuilding organizations, have contributed to enhancing the capacity of the National Police to combat gender-based violence.

80. Other activities of women's organizations have mainly been focused on legislative reform to promote women's rights and the involvement of women in transitional justice mechanisms.

81. Women's organizations have played an active role in campaigns to raise awareness of rape and sexual violence and have participated actively in the frameworks for dialogue established as part of the peacebuilding process in Burundi.

82. On 3 December 2008, women's organizations in Burundi issued a statement on the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which was seen as liable to spread to the whole region. They called, inter alia, on Heads of State to fulfil their commitments under the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region.

Political parties

83. Although it was not easy at first, the participation of political parties in the frameworks for dialogue, through various proposals as well as through the statement signed in Gitega on 22 August 2008, has been deemed positive. It has, however, been difficult to evaluate their action in relation to the commitment to integrate the priorities of the Strategic Framework into their missions and programmes.

84. The political parties' ongoing commitment to contribute to peacebuilding through debate should also be welcomed. Their pressure was particularly effective during the deadlock in negotiations between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL. They have also fostered debate on human rights violations, the process of establishing the independent national electoral commission and legislation on meetings held by political parties and civil society organizations.

C. Peacebuilding Commission and international partners

Peacebuilding Commission

85. The Peacebuilding Commission has maintained contact with the Government of Burundi and its domestic partners. Through its members on the ground and the Chairperson's visits to Bujumbura, the Commission has been able to draw greater attention to the challenges of peacebuilding and facilitate joint actions to further the peace process in Burundi. During the reporting period, Burundi continued to receive assistance from the Commission and other international partners. Various partners continued to provide support for many areas of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding (security, justice, human rights, land issues and economic recovery).

86. Members of the Peacebuilding Commission have provided bilateral assistance while multilateral partners have continued to provide support for the implementation of the mutual commitments under the Strategic Framework and for the Government's priorities set out in the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper Priority Action Programme in order to ensure that basic public services are provided and that Burundi's economic needs are met. Since the establishment of the Peacebuilding Commission and the organization of the 2007 round-table donors' conference, some non-traditional donors such as China, India and Switzerland have forged partnerships with Burundi.

87. Since its first review meeting, the Commission and international and regional partners have been concentrating their efforts on achieving outright peace. To ensure appropriate assistance and support, the Commission convened a meeting on 12 December 2008 with the South African Facilitator on developments in the peace process and in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. At the end of that meeting, participants called on the international community to provide, as a matter of urgency, support for the preparatory work in connection with the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; urged Palipehutu-FNL to release all children associated with it; and called on Palipehutu-FNL to transform itself into a political party. They also undertook to review the longer-term plan for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process once it was finalized by the Government of Burundi. The Chairperson's participation in the meeting of the Group of Special Envoys for Burundi in Bujumbura on 16-17 January 2009 led to fruitful discussions between the Commission and key national and international stakeholders.

United Nations system

88. During the reporting period, the United Nations continued the integrated approach involving the joint programmes and the catalytic projects financed by the Peacebuilding Fund and the bilateral and multilateral donors in the areas outlined in the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding.

89. The United Nations system also continued to support the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement between the Government of Burundi and Palipehutu-FNL. Its contribution to the process has been its ability to rapidly mobilize financial resources at critical junctures through the Peacebuilding Fund and make them immediately to Government agencies in Bujumbura pending funding from partners.

90. The joint definition by the United Nations system and the Government of Burundi of strategic priorities for 2010-2014 covering both development and peacebuilding issues confirms the concept of integration which the United Nations has put in place in Burundi to support the Government's peacebuilding efforts.

D. International partners

91. Burundi continued to receive support from international partners during the reporting period. A number of partners continued to provide support for several areas of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding.

92. The bilateral and multilateral partners have continued to support a number of activities that contribute to the implementation of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding.

93. Coordinated support has been provided by the European Commission and several of its member States, as well as USAID and the World Bank in the areas of security (army, police); good governance; justice, including transitional justice; humanitarian assistance; the reintegration of vulnerable populations; the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; subregional reintegration; land reform policy; community rehabilitation; and human rights.

94. During the reporting period, China, Switzerland, Norway, the Russian Federation and Japan provided support in some of the above-mentioned areas.

95. The European Union, through the Political Directorate and with the support of Switzerland and the United States of America, has helped to achieve progress in the political dialogue and the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement between the Government and FNL.

96. The European Commission financed the activities of several United Nations agencies, carried out to assist the Government with the repatriation of Burundians from the United Republic of Tanzania.

E. Subregion

97. The subregion was actively involved in the efforts to break the deadlock in negotiations between the Government and Palipehutu-FNL. The direct involvement of the subregion's Heads of State paved the way for the adoption of positions conducive to moving the peace process forward, including the requirements of the Declaration of the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region on the Burundi Peace Process of 4 December 2008.

98. Countries of the subregion have continued to make crucial contributions to the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. South Africa, for example, has maintained its troop contingent serving with the African Union force. The leaders of Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania have remained committed to the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi. South Africa also expanded its bilateral cooperation with Burundi in the fields of defence, health and technology.

99. The International Conference on the Great Lakes Region provided a boost to the efforts to repatriate Burundian refugees. In that regard, by extending the initial deadline beyond 31 December 2008, for all Burundian refugees to leave its territory the United Republic of Tanzania made it easier to manage the repatriation process. Many of the international partners have called for a platform for dialogue on how to coordinate the Ministry of Solidarity's efforts to repatriate the refugees.

100. The International Conference on the Great Lakes Region has provided technical assistance to the Government of Burundi in the areas of peacebuilding, good governance, the promotion of democracy and combating gender-based violence. The Executive Secretariat of the Conference has also organized a series of meetings, in an effort to persuade Palipehutu-FNL to return to the peace process. In addition to its economic integration programme, which includes combating poverty and promoting economic growth, the East African Community has established a forum for cooperation in the areas of good governance, human rights and peace and security, with a view to consolidating peace in the Great Lakes region.

IV. Coordination of assistance from partners

101. Coordination between the Government and the technical and financial partners improved during the reporting period. The work of the Partners Coordination Group has continued at the three levels: the Political Forum, the Strategic Forum and the sectoral and technical clusters.

102. The 13 sectoral groups of the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper have been established and the technical work has begun, although the work of the individual groups is not proceeding at the same pace. The technical groups of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding met in September and October to review the Monitoring and Tracking Mechanism but the outcome of that exercise was not endorsed by all the stakeholders. Indeed, that exercise should be more pragmatic in its approach and less demanding with regard to the number of indicators and how they are calculated, so that even stakeholders who are not specialists can use them. The technical groups met again in December and January to draft this report; however, attendance was not as high as it could have been because of the timing. It should also be noted that unless national participants are given incentives or, at the very least, reimbursed for their travel expenses, maximum attendance at meetings cannot be expected. Discussions are under way to explore ways of facilitating periodic and regular exchanges of views so as to ensure continuing political dialogue on the implementation of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding and the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper.

103. The view was expressed that, in the interest of efficiency and transparency, and in order to comply with the Paris Principles, the functioning of the Partners Coordination Group should be reviewed. At the meeting of the Third High-Level Forum on Aid Effectiveness in Accra, the Burundian delegation proposed a plan to harmonize the performance indicators of the Strategic Framework and the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper so as to avoid a duplication of efforts in implementing the Government's development and peacebuilding policy.

V. Conclusions and recommendations

104. This report shows that, as a result of the courageous and patient efforts of all stakeholders, considerable progress has been made in the peacebuilding process in Burundi. Notable progress has been achieved as a result of the unflagging support of the Government of Burundi, civil society, the United Nations and other international partners.

105. Despite such progress, all stakeholders need to continue to pay attention to a number of remaining challenges which are becoming increasingly complex owing to developments in the social and political situation. While the following recommendations are not exhaustive, they provide a basis for consolidating the achievements to date and fostering further progress in the peacebuilding process.

Promotion of good governance

106. Political dialogue. In order to forestall any political tensions in the lead-up to the elections, the Government of Burundi must engage in a permanent dialogue with all national partners. Such dialogue should permit greater interaction among development partners within the planning, development assistance coordination and monitoring and peacebuilding mechanisms. The Government must also ensure that the Political Forum meets regularly to consider the political aspects of tracking the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding and the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper and that the dialogue informs the work of the sectors and sub-sectors.

107. The Peacebuilding Commission could provide crucial support in facilitating the dissemination of information and dialogue among partners at Headquarters and in the field, thereby maximizing their role in the peacebuilding process. All international partners are urged to promote a peaceful political dialogue among the national stakeholders and to continue their constructive engagement with the Government of Burundi. The stakeholders must strengthen efforts to establish a forum for permanent dialogue among the national partners, with a view to sustaining the positive commitments that have resulted from the frameworks for dialogue of the Peacebuilding Fund.

Legal framework for inheritance

108. The Government must expedite the preparation, consideration and adoption by the National Assembly of a bill on inheritance, matrimonial regimes and gifts containing provisions relating to women's access to land. Civil society and women's associations must also be involved in this process.

Action to combat corruption

109. The Government must also make a commitment to step up its efforts to combat corruption, first and foremost by expediting the settlement of cases currently before the courts, such as those relating to the Interpetrol oil company and to the sale of the Falcon 50 presidential jet. Stakeholders are also urged to accord priority attention to the issue of misappropriation of funds. Development partners must continue to support the State's capacity-building efforts in public administration.

Independent national electoral commission and legal framework for elections

110. The Government must take action to ensure national ownership of the independent national electoral commission by involving national stakeholders in the consultations relating to its establishment.

111. Furthermore, community stakeholders must mobilize support for peaceful and active participation in consultations on the electoral process and constantly report any irregularities. The process of inclusion in and consultation on the independent national electoral commission must begin in the first quarter of 2009, in keeping with the recommendations of the most recent follow-up report on the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in Burundi of 9 July 2008. It is the responsibility of the Government to create an environment conducive to the full exercise of political rights and civil liberties, in particular the freedom of opinion and expression. That said, the Government, political parties and international partners must work together to identify such assistance as may be necessary to ensure that the requirements for the holding of elections described above are met.

112. The Peacebuilding Commission can also play an important role in monitoring and supporting Burundi's efforts to create an environment conducive to democratic, free and transparent elections in 2010. Civil society requires sustained support in this regard while the Commission can facilitate dialogue with the Government and its partners.

Neutrality of the public service

113. The Government of Burundi must strive to ensure that political interference, including political patronage, does not adversely affect the proper functioning of the public service.

Ceasefire Agreement with FNL

114. The Government of Burundi and FNL must work together to ensure the timely implementation of the commitments under both the Declaration of the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region, held on 4 December 2008, and the Bujumbura Declaration, which was issued following the meeting of the Group of Special Envoys for Burundi on 17 January 2009.

115. The Government, with the participation of development partners, primarily the World Bank, must finalize and implement the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme as soon as possible.

116. International partners are urged to give technical and financial support to national partners during the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, according to the modalities agreed with the Government. The international community's support must be in keeping with the spirit of the Declaration of the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region, the Bujumbura Declaration issued following the meeting of the Group of Special Envoys and the Peacebuilding Commission's recommendations of 12 December 2008, and with the common principles and mutual engagements of the Government and international community set out therein. To that end, the Political Directorate will keep the international community informed of progress made in relation to the peace process and will report on any obstacles to the full implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement.

117. The Government, with the participation of development partners, primarily the World Bank, must draw up a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration strategy as soon as possible.

118. The Regional Peace Initiative and the South African Facilitation are encouraged to continue to play an active role in the Burundi peace process with a view to ensuring its timely conclusion. Both actors are invited to monitor developments in the peace process and to provide stakeholders with information on areas where the assistance of national and international partners may be required to bring the process to a successful conclusion.

119. Lastly, the Peacebuilding Commission can continue to bring added value to the peace process by supporting the mobilization of the resources needed to fund the full implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement, on the basis of a sharing of responsibilities and mutual commitments with the Government of Burundi. It must also monitor the peace process closely so as to be able to provide information and advice to the Government of Burundi and international partners.

Security sector

120. The Government of Burundi must continue its security sector reform efforts, in particular by honouring its commitment to professionalize the security forces and respecting the agreements establishing a ceiling for the armed forces (25,000) and the national police (15,000). In order to establish an environment that is conducive to the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the Government of Burundi must also scale up its activities aimed at disarming the civilian population, including its awareness-raising/advocacy activities, while at the same time redoubling its efforts to strengthen the rule of law and combat all forms of crime.

121. International partners are called upon to provide the technical and financial support needed to implement Burundi's priorities as regards security sector reform, including the yet to be drawn up disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. The Peacebuilding Commission can continue to bring added value to the Burundi peace process by supporting the mobilization of the resources needed to conduct security sector reform, on the basis of a sharing of responsibilities and mutual commitments with the Government of Burundi.

Justice, human rights and action to combat impunity

Transitional justice

122. The Government of Burundi must make every effort to ensure that national consultations on the establishment of transitional justice mechanisms go ahead as envisaged, without hindrances or obstacles. To ensure that the Government honours the commitments it has made (see section of the report on commitments), stakeholders must mobilize support for active involvement by the Government in consultations on the establishment of transitional justice mechanisms.

Justice sector reform

123. The Government must continue to adopt measures aimed at improving the justice system. Furthermore, women's rights, in particular their inheritance rights, should continue to be accorded priority in efforts to improve the justice system and the protection of human rights.

Civil and political rights

124. The Government must play a leading role in efforts to promote respect for the various principles and rules governing the free exercise of political rights and civil liberties, while at the same time combating political intimidation.

Action to combat impunity

125. The Government must keep action to combat impunity high on its agenda, in particular by ensuring that symbolic anti-impunity cases and investigations, such as the Gatumba and Kinama cases, are concluded.

Violence against women and children

126. In addition to today's climate of community violence, violence against women and children is a matter of serious concern. The Government, with the support of development partners and civil society, must step up its efforts to curb such violence, in particular by prosecuting and punishing the perpetrators thereof.

Independent national commission on human rights

127. The Government should ensure that the independent national commission on human rights is established in a timely manner and that it complies with international norms and respects the Paris Principles.

Penal Code and Code of Penal Procedure

128. The Senate is urged to adopt the new Penal Code in a timely fashion while the Parliament is urged to expedite the revision of the Code of Penal Procedure. In that connection, international partners are encouraged to provide the technical and financial support needed to implement Burundi's priorities as regards human rights, judicial reform and action to combat impunity.

129. The Peacebuilding Commission is well placed to monitor and support national efforts to promote human rights and combat impunity. It should continue to promote the establishment of transitional justice mechanisms and support the truth and reconciliation commission, when it is established.

The land issue and socio-economic recovery

Land tenure

130. In order to comprehensively address the issue of land disputes, the Government must both build the capacity of the National Commission on Land and Other Assets to settle disputes that have already been recorded and implement the national land policy. Such measures should make a solid contribution to the sustainable reintegration of various segments of Burundian society, including returnees and other vulnerable groups.

Reintegration of refugees and returnees

131. All partners, including the Government, United Nations agencies and partners in the subregion, must continue to work in a concerted manner towards the reintegration of returnees and other vulnerable groups.

Socio-economic recovery

132. In view of the fragile pre-election environment, the Government of Burundi should finalize, in a timely manner, the national strategy for the long-term socio-economic reintegration of former FNL combatants, other ex-combatants and demobilized former combatants. It must also mobilize the resources needed to implement that strategy. The Government is encouraged to promote Burundi's socio-economic development, including by implementing a modern agricultural policy. The foregoing should ensure the long-term reintegration of various segments of Burundian society, including returnees and other vulnerable groups. International partners are encouraged to provide the technical and financial support needed to implement Burundi's land tenure and socio-economic integration priorities.

133. In the wider regional context, the Government should take the steps needed to ensure the proper integration of socio-economic agents into the East African Community and provide appropriate support to the private sector, especially during this transitional period. Subregional leaders should continue to support Burundi's integration into the East African Community until July 2009, when its Customs Union enters into force.

134. The Peacebuilding Commission should continue to play its key role of adding value to the efforts to resolve the crisis, promote socio-economic recovery and achieve sustainable development. The Commission has been playing a crucial role in mobilizing resources and facilitating the provision of technical and financial assistance in that regard.

Mobilization and coordination of international assistance

135. Bilateral and multilateral partners should continue to support the implementation of the Government priorities set out in the Priority Action Programme for the implementation of the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper. In addition, the Government, in cooperation with its international partners, should support efforts to consolidate the results of Peacebuilding Fund projects, with a view to identifying the best ways of building peace. The Peacebuilding Commission will continue to facilitate dialogue with the Government and all national and international stakeholders. To that end, it will utilize its capacity for providing advice and guidance on strategic approaches to peacebuilding and draw on the best practices and experiences of other countries. It will also continue to work to ensure that the attention of States members of the Burundi configuration remains focused on mobilizing the additional resources that Burundi needs to implement the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in Burundi and its Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper.

Subregional dimension

136. States signatories to the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region are urged to ratify the Pact and implement the commitments contained therein. The Executive Secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region will continue to support the peacebuilding efforts of the Government of Burundi and the Governments of other countries in the region. The international community, particularly those partners supporting the Government in this respect, should continue to work with the Government in implementing regional integration projects, including the Customs Union among the States members of the East African Community, which is scheduled to enter into force on 1 July 2009. This appeal also applies to the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries, which strengthens ties among Burundi, Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo.
