Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration

Mission in Kosovo

Participation of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations

Report of the Secretary-General

Summary

The present report is prepared pursuant to paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 54/245 A of 23 December 1999, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake a study on the use of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations. The report provides information on the use of United Nations Volunteers up to the present and on the possibilities for expanding their use in peacekeeping operations in the future.

Highlights of United Nations Volunteers cooperation in peacekeeping operations		7

I. Introduction

1. In accordance with paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 54/245 A of 23 December 1999 and the request of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report on the financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (A/54/622), the Secretary-General has prepared the present study on the use of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations. The Advisory Committee had expressed the view that opportunities for the use of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations should be explored more intensively and that the volunteer service could be a potential source of immediate assistance if the mix of expertise could be expanded to include the sorts of staff required as gratis personnel, in accordance with the procedures established by the Assembly (ibid., para. 38).

II. Historical background

2. Collaboration between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme in the peacekeeping arena dates back to the early 1990s. United Nations Volunteers first participated in United Nations field missions in early 1991 in the United Nations Advance Mission in Cambodia and in 1992 during the succession mission, the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia. During this time approximately 700 United Nations Volunteers were mobilized and deployed.

3. Subsequently, the Department has called upon the UNV programme to participate in 19 field operations, including the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, the United Nations Operation in Somalia, the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa, the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, the International Civilian Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic, the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, the United Nations Mission in East Timor, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and, most recently, the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone.

4. In total, more than 3,000 United Nations Volunteers have served in the past decade in the above-mentioned field operations. United Nations Volunteers are systematically included in the formulation of staffing tables for field missions because of the flexibility they offer in terms of rapid deployment and range of occupational expertise. Currently, almost 900 United Nations Volunteers are serving in various functions in United Nations field missions. In the past year almost 2,000 Volunteers were mobilized to meet the increasing operational requirements dictated by new and expanding missions and to complement the missions' civilian staff component.

III. The United Nations Volunteers programme

5. The UNV programme was created by the General Assembly in 1970 to serve as an operational partner in development cooperation at the request of United Nations Member States. It is administered under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and works through UNDP country offices around the world.

6. There are about 4,000 qualified and experienced women and men of more than 140 nationalities serving annually in developing countries as volunteer specialists and field workers. Since 1971, more than 20,000 United Nations Volunteers from some 150 developing and industrialized nations have worked in about 140 countries. Currently, 60 per cent are citizens of developing countries and 40 per cent come from the industrialized world. United Nations Volunteers have relevant academic qualifications (42 per cent at the postgraduate level) or a proven track record in community-based action in such areas as agriculture, health, education, community development, vocational training, industry, transport and population. All have working experience, usually some 10 years, and their average age is 37. Up to now approximately 28 per cent of all United Nations Volunteers have been women. Their assignments can range from three months to two years, depending on the requirements of the field missions they are serving in.

7. The UNV programme involves a wide range of sectors; it maintains a roster of returned Volunteers, many of whom are ready, often on a standby basis, to contribute their services to a second, or sometimes even third or fourth United Nations field operation, containing offers of service from 5,000 men and women from around the world covering some 110 professional categories. United Nations Volunteers work in technical, economic and social fields in four main areas, namely, in technical cooperation with Governments that are short of skills, with community-based initiatives for self-reliance, in humanitarian relief and rehabilitation and in support of human rights and electoral and peace-building processes.

8. With regard to peace operations, United Nations Volunteers have been engaged in many aspects of peacekeeping, peace-building and democratization, from demilitarization and census-taking to the organization of elections and the protection of human rights. A narrative summary highlighting the functions and types of activities United Nations Volunteers have been called upon to participate in is provided in the attached annex.

9. The key contribution of the UNV programme is the ability to quickly mobilize international volunteers with the relevant skills and experience to carry out functions essential to field operations and to support them in the field. The inherent characteristics of the UNV programme extend the value of the collaboration beyond a mere staffing modality, as it serves the cause of peace and development through enhancing opportunities for the participation and involvement of all peoples.

IV. United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping

10. The effectiveness of the United Nations in field operations depends on its capacity to rapidly deploy qualified and experienced civilian personnel to the field to carry out its mandated activities. Challenges to meet field mission personnel requirements have intensified during the past 18 months with the increase in size and complexity of peacekeeping missions, in particular transitional administration functions that have been entrusted to the United Nations in Kosovo and in East Timor.

11. The introduction of nation-building, public administration and governance components in these two recent peacekeeping operations has required the assignment of personnel whose competencies and experience fall well outside the traditional parameters of logistical and technical support provided to military contingents and observers, civilian police and civilian United Nations personnel. Formerly, staff providing substantive support were required to have expertise in such areas as political reconciliation and post-conflict recovery, whereas today's field missions require personnel with expertise ranging from criminal law to public revenue collection and administration, reconstruction of public utilities and public health and education.

12. The use of United Nations Volunteers to perform complex functions in these new missions has enabled the Organization to field qualified personnel in the areas of governance and public administration within a short time frame. As an example, in UNMIK the civil and electoral registration of the population of Kosovo was conducted over the course of six months with the assistance of 500 United Nations Volunteers deployed for this purpose.

13. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations has over the past year expanded the inclusion of United Nations Volunteers in its peacekeeping operations, as evidenced by the large number of them fielded to the missions in Kosovo and East Timor. In order to extend this participation further, the Department will create and maintain a roster of candidates, including United Nations Volunteers. The Department will include in this roster details relevant to the candidatures of Volunteers who have previous peacekeeping experience in order to quickly meet new or additional requirements for experienced personnel in the field missions. The recent report of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (A/55/305-S/2000/809) makes several recommendations with regard to civilian specialists, including the establishment of a central Intranet-based roster and the increased use of United Nations Volunteers. In this connection, the Department aims at intensifying a pre-selection exercise of the occupational groups required for staffing of missions. Furthermore, the Department and UNV headquarters will strive to strengthen their cooperation whereby the UNV roster could be utilized to pre-select and vet candidates in as many occupational groups as possible for speedy deployment to the field.

V. Administrative and financial considerations

14. The United Nations Volunteers profiles reflect a commitment to the purpose of a field mission, a desire to participate and an ability to share professional knowledge and skills. This is demonstrated through the acceptance of volunteer conditions of service and through the acceptance of and ability to live and work under hardship conditions.

15. At the field level in any given mission that UNV is invited to participate in, a UNV Programme and Administrative Support Unit attached to a mission's administration is established where there are a large number of Volunteers. Such units are responsible for the administrative backstopping involved in the identification, recruitment, deployment, and in-country support provided to Volunteers. This field support structure for the serving Volunteers is a standard feature in the memorandum of understanding signed by the United Nations and the UNV Programme, detailing the terms and conditions for the participation of Volunteers in individual peacekeeping missions.

16. The mission-specific memorandum of understanding also includes the budgetary arrangements for the costs associated with the Volunteers, comprising, in the field, living allowance, hazard pay and mission area travel expenses, and, at UNV headquarters, assignment travel, pre-departure expenses and programme support costs. A rate of programme support of 8 per cent is charged in respect of expenditures incurred for United Nations Volunteers both at UNV headquarters and in the peacekeeping mission. Programme and Administrative Support Units are also financed from peacekeeping mission budgets.

17. Currently the cost of engaging United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations is approximately $45,000 per annum per Volunteer, depending on the mission-specific costs, such as travel. It is of paramount importance that Volunteers not be regarded as "cheap labour" as a result of their lower cost to the Organization. As international United Nations Volunteers, they are unsalaried professionals who in return for their services receive a living allowance intended to cover basic needs, including housing and utilities, ranging from $1,000 to $2,700 per month, depending on the country of assignment.

18. While the cost-effectiveness of the UNV modality is an important factor to consider when planning mission-specific staff requirements, this factor is not seen as the defining characteristic of the programme's strengths. Rather, its key strengths lie in the type, quality and commitment of the individuals attracted to serve in its programmes. With an age ranging from 34 to 43 years and with an average of at least 10 years of related work experience, United Nations Volunteers challenge the old volunteer stereotype of well-meaning amateurs lacking the professionalism such serious undertakings require. These individuals are middle-level and upper-middle-level specialists who are motivated to be of service within a programme that reflects the neutrality and objectivity of the United Nations. The UNV programme has been able to attract qualified people who want to volunteer for a period of their professional career to assist the United Nations in its work.

VI. Potential for wider use of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping missions

19. As stated above, the key contribution of the UNV programme is its ability to quickly mobilize international volunteers with the relevant skills and experience to carry out functions essential to field operations and to support them in the field. The fact that there are currently some 1,300 United Nations Volunteers serving in field operations around the world in various capacities demonstrates the appreciation on the part of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations for the valuable contribution the UNV programme makes and the continued need for the inclusion of Volunteers in mission staffing complements wherever feasible.

20. The UNV programme's ongoing and future collaboration with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations will be influenced by the programme's policy of maintaining an appropriate balance in the provision of substantive support versus technical and administrative support in field operations. The strength and attraction of the UNV programme lies in its ability to provide appropriate candidates in substantive areas such as electoral, human rights, civil and political affairs.

21. At the same time, technical and administrative support functions also play an important part in the ultimate success of a specific United Nations field operation, in particular in areas where there is a need to provide training to local inhabitants in specialized technical and administrative areas. For this reason, UNV exercises flexibility in determining which roles it can best support.

22. An example of such flexibility may be seen in the current collaboration between the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNV in East Timor, where within a projected UNV volunteer corps of almost 500, approximately three quarters serve in substantive activities, in particular electoral work and civil registration, and one quarter serve in technical and administrative support. In the case of Kosovo, United Nations Volunteers are largely involved in the electoral process, with the exception of a small group of UNV medical personnel and the UNV support officers.

23. The Department and UNV have also agreed to continue to work together closely to ensure that due recognition is given to United Nations Volunteers. In this regard, and based on lessons learned, the Department and UNV headquarters have also developed policies and an understanding regarding the possibility for United Nations Volunteers to continue their involvement in missions under mission appointments while safeguarding the integrity of the UNV programme and the prime motivation of United Nations Volunteers to be involved in the cause of peace and development.

VII. Conclusion

24. It is apparent that the UNV programme, supported through the UNDP country office network, has proven capable of expeditiously identifying and deploying qualified United Nations Volunteers to peacekeeping missions and field operations. During this period of unprecedented expectations and demands from the United Nations by the international community, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations is committed to strengthening its partnership and extending its collaboration with the UNV programme.

25. The Department intends to continue its efforts to exploit the potential for increased use of United Nations Volunteers in peacekeeping operations wherever feasible, in particular for those functions or skills which are not normally available in the Secretariat or which are limited.

Cambodia (1992-1993)

1. An initial 465 United Nations Volunteers (district electoral supervisors), recruited from 66 countries, served in the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) and its earlier advance mission (UNAMIC) for the two-year period 1992-1993. Training some 50,000 Cambodian nationals on the job in the appropriate skills, they successfully organized the registration of the voting population, numbering 4.7 million. In two-person teams, they also conducted a civic education campaign in virtually every district of the country, as well as establishing polling stations and supervising the May 1993 elections. In addition, around 220 Volunteers provided technical and administrative assistance, essentially within the Division of Administration.

Mozambique (1993-1994)

2. A total of 280 United Nations Volunteers served the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) in support of the peace-building and electoral processes. The breakdown of the UNV staffing contribution was as follows: demobilization, 111; logistics officers and head of sub-offices, 46; humanitarian assistance coordination, 13; electoral observers, 103; and UNV Support Unit, 7.

Somalia (1993-1994)

3. The contribution of UNV to the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) was likewise significant: 120 United Nations Volunteers provided services in: (a) substantive areas, serving as human rights officers, demobilization officers, justice/juvenile officers, humanitarian affairs officers, policy planning officers and political officers; and (b) technical/administrative functions of the Mission.

South Africa (1994)

4. Just over 200 United Nations Volunteers (electoral observers) served with the United Nations Observer Mission in South Africa (UNOMSA). Deployed at the provincial level, the Volunteers were responsible for conducting demographic and election-related surveys, identifying and establishing polling stations, observing party rallies, monitoring the election process and monitoring the movement and safe keeping of electoral materials.

Liberia (1993-1997)

5. A total of 21 United Nations Volunteers initially served in the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) to carry out administrative functions related to elections. An additional 29 Volunteers were thereafter fielded to serve in other functions, such as camp supervisors for the demobilization centres and in administrative and logistical support functions; however, all of them were repatriated because of the violence that took place in April 1996. When the Liberian peace process received a new boost and elections were planned for July 1997, the UNV programme fielded 35 Volunteers (electoral observers) who successfully served side-by-side with United Nations military observers for the presidential and legislative elections.

Rwanda (1994-1996)

6. A total of 74 United Nations Volunteers were recruited to support the administrative and technical functions of the United Nations Assistance Mission to Rwanda (UNAMIR). All the Volunteers were deployed and served until the Mission's closure in late 1996.

Guatemala (1994 to present)

7. From the outset of the mission until the present, the UNV programme has maintained a constant number of approximately 100 United Nations Volunteers in the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA), including the Commission for Historical Clarification, serving largely in substantive roles, such as human rights officers and legal affairs officers. Currently 98 United Nations Volunteers are serving in MINUGUA.

Haiti (1995 to March 2000)

8. Under the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) and the United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH), a total of 29 United Nations Volunteers served to support the administrative functions of the missions. The Volunteers provided specialized services in communications, air operations and flight safety, engineering, logistics and the like. Under the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH), an additional 30 Volunteers (human rights observers) were fielded in early 1995.

Angola (1995 to June 2000)

9. A total of 75 United Nations Volunteers (50 to support demobilization efforts and 25 to support administrative and logistical functions) were fielded to the United Nations Verification Mission in Angola (UNAVEM III) in 1995.

Former Yugoslavia (1995)

10. The original plan called for a total of 308 United Nations Volunteers to work in the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in April 1995. However, only 24 were actually fielded, and the recruitment for the remaining posts was cancelled for reasons related to the transformation of the mission into the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO), UNPROFOR and the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), collectively referred to as United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF), and its change in mandate. Subsequent to the closure of UNPF, all of the Volunteers serving under the memorandum of understanding with UNPF were transferred to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) in early 1996.

Eastern Slavonia (1996-1997)

11. Under UNTAES, a memorandum of understanding was signed in June 1996 for the services of 100 United Nations Volunteers to support the implementation of civil affairs and the peaceful handover of the mandate of UNTAES to the people of Eastern Slavonia. Of the total, half served as civil affairs officers (carrying out needs assessments, population surveys, etc.), and the remaining 50 were assigned support functions. In addition, 20 Volunteers (electoral officers) were recruited in January 1997 to serve three-month assignments.

Iraq (1991-1992 and 1997 to present)

12. In 1991 more than 100 United Nations Volunteers served with various United Nations agencies under the overall umbrella of the humanitarian support mission. In July 1997, 14 United Nations Volunteers were budgeted under a memorandum of understanding to provide support to the United Nations Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator in Iraq (UNOHCI); however, only 10 were fielded in the support functions and the remaining four positions were withdrawn owing to the changing requirements of the mission. Currently only two Volunteers remain.

Central African Republic (1998)

13. At the request of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and Political Affairs, the services of 14 United Nations Volunteers (medium-term electoral observers) were provided to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (MINURCA) for the organization of legislative elections. Under an amendment to the memorandum of understanding signed in June 1999, an additional 43 Volunteers (30 medium-term electoral observers and 13 in support functions) were fielded for the presidential elections held in September 1999.

East Timor (1999 to present)

14. Within a six-week period in June 1999, the UNV programme fielded 481 district electoral officers and 19 medical personnel to assist the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET) to organize and implement the August 1999 popular consultations. Serving at the forefront, and as the largest category of civilian United Nations personnel, the Volunteers performed the functions of voter registration, observation of the campaign process, civic education, observation of the balloting and counting of the ballots.

requirements in the areas of civil affairs and technical support.

15. Following the crisis in East Timor immediately after the popular consultations, all United Nations personnel, including the Volunteers, were evacuated to Australia. In October 1999 approximately 70 of them returned to serve at the district level in the capacity of civil affairs officers, bridging the gap between the transformation of UNAMET into the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET). Currently, approximately 500 Volunteers are serving in the mission. The UNV programme has been called upon to provide an unprecedented diversity of functions within 25 different components of the mission to serve in over 90 different substantive and technical support functions. An additional 328 Volunteers are currently planned and budgeted for the period from July 2000 to June 2001 to provide support to the civic registration and electoral processes.

Kosovo (1999 to present)

16. The initial contribution of UNV to the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) called for the provision of 200 Volunteers to serve as civil affairs officers (with the Department of Civil Affairs and Public Administration) in September 1999. An additional 100 United Nations Volunteers in the same category were requested in February 2000. In March, 400 additional Volunteers were requested to serve as registration supervisors to organize, supervise and implement the whole Kosovo electoral registration process under a United Nations/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Joint Registration Task Force. The fielding of more than 300 specially recruited Volunteers from 80 different nationalities was done over a three-week period in April.

Sierra Leone (2000 to present)

17. The latest contribution of the UNV programme to peacekeeping operations is its participation since early 2000 in the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL). A total of 72 United Nations Volunteers were deployed to complement the international staffing
