middle-income developing countries still face significant challenges in the area of poverty eradication and that efforts to address those challenges should be supported in order to ensure that achievements made to date are sustained, including through support to the effective development of comprehensive cooperation policies,

“Recalling its resolutions 63/223 of 19 December 2008 and 64/208 of 21 December 2009,

“Reaffirming that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of programme countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities are carried out for the benefit of programme countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

“Underscoring that there is no ‘one size fits all’ approach to development and that development cooperation by the United Nations development system should be able to respond to the varying development needs of programme countries and should be in alignment with their national development plans and strategies in accordance with its mandates,

“Taking note of the outcomes of the international conferences on development cooperation with middle-income countries held in Madrid, El Salvador and Windhoek, and the regional conference on the theme ‘Increasing the competitiveness of African middle-income countries’, held in Cairo,

“Recalling all of the principles supported by the United Nations system, including the principles of predictability, universality and progressivity, and reaffirming the importance of providing strategic support to all programme countries, including middle-income and least developed countries, upon request of the recipient Government, in order to address their specific needs,

“Noting that national averages based on criteria such as per capita income do not always reflect the actual particularities and development needs of the middle-income countries, and recognizing the significant diversity of middle-income countries,

“Recognizing the need to review the classification criteria of the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations for middle-income countries and adapt them to the particular development challenges of all developing countries,

“Recalling that, despite notable reductions in extreme poverty, middle-income countries as a group are still home to approximately 64 per cent of the world population that lives in severe poverty,

“Recognizing that high levels of income inequality constitute an underlying factor in the vulnerability of middle-income countries and constrain human development in most of those countries and that progress in poverty reduction is often not in tandem with high rates of growth in many middle-income countries,

“Recognizing that, despite the achievements and efforts of middle-income countries, a significant number of people are still living in poverty and inequalities remain, and that further investment in social services and economic opportunities, are needed in order to reduce those inequalities,

“Stressing that middle-income countries continue to face particular challenges, inter alia, in the creation of jobs for their youth, the diversification of their economies, the development of technologies and access to international markets, and, in this regard, that it is essential that the international community pay due attention to those challenges,

“Expressing deep concern that some middle-income countries are highly indebted and, as such, are at risk of severe debt distress, particularly with the onset of the current global financial and economic crisis,

“1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

“2. Recognizes that middle-income countries still face significant challenges in their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and, in that regard, underlines the importance of international support, through various forms, that is well aligned with national priorities to address the development needs of middle-income countries;

“3. Acknowledges the efforts made and successes achieved by many middle-income countries to eradicate poverty and achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, as well as their significant contribution to global and regional development and economic stability;

“4. Recognizes that middle-income developing countries still face significant challenges in the area of poverty eradication and that efforts to address those challenges should be supported in order to ensure that achievements made to date are sustained, including through support to the effective development of comprehensive cooperation policies;

“5. Reaffirms the increased importance of South-South cooperation, and in this regard encourages Member States and the funds, programmes, specialized agencies and other entities of the United Nations system involved to mainstream support to South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation to help developing countries, at their request and with their ownership and leadership, to develop capacities to maximize the benefits and impact of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation in order to achieve their national goals, with special emphasis on internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

“6. Underlines the need for sustained efforts towards achieving debt sustainability in middle-income countries in order to avoid a debt crisis, and to that end notes and encourages further efforts by international financial institutions to enhance facilities for them;

“7. Recalls that development cooperation has the potential to promote intersectoral approaches to policy and programmes and public-private partnerships and to facilitate peer-to-peer engagement, capacity-development and the sharing of experiences and successes within and across regions;

“8. Invites the international community, including international financial institutions, to further strengthen their support to the development efforts of middle-income countries through targeted technical cooperation, provision of resources, technology transfer and capacity-building, as appropriate, while taking into account their national priorities and development policies;

“9. Calls upon the international community to continue to further undertake timely, appropriate and targeted measures to address the new and additional challenges that the current economic and financial crisis has imposed on middle-income countries, on a case-by-case basis, based on the specific needs and national priorities of each of those countries;

“10. Notes that development cooperation between the United Nations system and middle-income countries needs to be strengthened, including by aligning the programming of United Nations activities much more closely with national strategies and policies and the specific existing and emerging needs of middle-income countries;

“11. Invites the United Nations development system, in particular the funds and programmes, and at the regional level, in accordance with their respective mandates, to improve support, as appropriate, to middle-income countries and to improve coordination and exchange of experiences with other international organizations, international financial institutions and regional organizations in this field, as well as to align the programming of its activities more closely with national development strategies;

“12. Stresses that core resources, because of their untied nature, continue to be the bedrock of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and, in this regard, notes with concern that the share of core contributions to United Nations funds and programmes has declined in recent years and recognizes the need for organizations to address, on a continuous basis, the imbalance between core and non-core resources;

“13. Decides to create a specialized unit within the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and to address the particular development challenges of middle-income countries;

“14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to include in its provisional agenda, under the item entitled ‘Globalization and interdependence’ a sub-item entitled ‘Development cooperation with middle-income countries’.”

8. In the light of the adoption of draft resolution A/C.2/66/L.78, draft resolution A/C.2/66/L.18 was withdrawn by its sponsors.
