Australia: amendment to the revised draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, Supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime*

[Original: English]

Article 2: Definitions

Australia proposes the insertion in article 2 of a new subparagraph to follow subparagraph (c):

“(...) ‘Deactivated firearm’: a firearm that has been modified in accordance with the principles established in article 10 of this Protocol so that it cannot expel a shot, bullet, other missile or projectile and cannot be readily converted to do so.”

Belgium

[Original: French]

Article 4: Scope

The following new paragraph should be added:

“(...) The activities of armed forces during an armed conflict, as those terms are understood under international humanitarian law, which are governed by that law shall not be governed by this Protocol.”

Canada

[Original: English]

Article 2: Definitions

The following amendment is proposed for subparagraph (d) of article 2:

“(d) ‘Illicit manufacturing’: the manufacturing or assembly of firearms and ammunition:

“(i) From components or parts illicitly trafficked;

“(ii) Without a licence or authorization from a competent authority of the State Party where the manufacture or assembly takes place; or

“(iii) Without marking the firearms at the time of manufacture.”

China

[Original: Chinese and English]

A. Amendments previously issued in document A/AC.254/5/Add.18

Article 4: Scope

1. China proposes that article 4, on scope, should read as follows:

“This Protocol applies to all classes of commercially traded and manufactured firearms, ammunition and other related materials but not to State-to-State transactions or transfers for purposes of national security or to firearms manufactured exclusively to equip a State Party’s own army or security force.”

Article 9: Marking of firearms

Paragraph 1 (a)

2. Manufacturers in China are obliged by law to put the appropriate marking on every firearm at the time of its production, regardless of what the firearm is destined to be used for (i.e. whether it is for military use or civilian use). However, markings may differ depending on what the firearms are to be used for. China is of the view that the criteria for determining what is an appropriate marking should be whatever enables the competent agency of a State Party to trace the source of the firearm. Therefore, it would be sufficient to require the marking to include the country of manufacture while leaving it to each State Party to decide what other information should be included in the marking. To make it more convenient to identify the country of manufacture, a universal system of country codes could be considered.

Paragraph 1 (b)

3. China does not require the marking of imported firearms. More consideration and discussion should be given to the provision in paragraph 1 (b) as it appears now. Bearing in mind the various practices in different countries concerning imported firearms, it might be sufficient for firearms to bear unique and identifiable markings that are recorded in full during the process of exporting and importing the firearms. Thus, paragraph 1 (a) of article 9, in combination with paragraph 1 (a) of article 8, could solve the problem of tracing imported firearms, thus relieving States Parties of the task of having to make changes in their current legislation and practices. In any case, the importing countries could decide whether to mark the imported firearms or not following their importation.

Article 10: Preventing the reactivating of deactivated firearms

4. China supports the idea of preventing the reactivating of deactivated firearms, but the provision in article 10 needs further clarification.

Article 11: General requirements for export, import and transit licensing or authorization systems

5. As for article 11, China has no particular difficulty with the requirements regarding export and import, but it has reservations with regard to transit licensing and retransfer authorization as the relevant provisions need to be clarified further. First and foremost, the definition of “transit” itself needs further clarification. In the view of China, the requirement of transit licensing inevitably imposes a heavier burden on the transit country. Besides, whether it is the importer or the exporter who should apply for the transit licence is not clear in the current provision. The relationship between transit and trans-shipping also needs clarification.

6. With regard to the requirement for written approval from the exporting country prior to re-export or retransfer, China is of the view that how to dispose of the imported firearms is the sovereign right of the importing country because, in general, once goods are delivered to the importer, the right of ownership is passed on to the importer, who in turn is responsible for the disposition of the goods. End-user certification could help to prevent the re-export or retransfer of firearms without the approval of the exporting country.

Article 14: Exchange of information

Paragraph 1

7. In paragraph 1, China proposes to add the words “and taking into account their legitimate security or commercial concerns,” after the words “applicable to them”.

Article 17: Confidentiality

8. China proposes to modify the last sentence in article 17 to read as follows:

“If for legal reasons such confidentiality cannot be maintained, the State Party that is to provide the information shall be notified prior to its provision of the information.”

B. Position paper previously issued in document A/AC.254/L.137

9. China attaches importance to combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms and supports intensified cooperation by the international community in drafting a protocol on that subject within the framework of the negotiation of the draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. It has, therefore, actively participated in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime in developing the draft Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (the “Firearms Protocol”).

10. Since the establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, the various parties have, on a preliminary basis, exchanged their views on the framework and the various articles of the draft Firearms Protocol. China maintains that, pending further in-depth discussions, it is necessary for the Ad Hoc Committee to review several issues of fundamental importance concerning the draft Firearms Protocol so as to ensure that the Ad Hoc Committee moves in the right direction and proceeds smoothly in its work. Such issues include how to interpret the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee in the relevant General Assembly resolutions, how to balance the relationship between the efforts in preventing and combating crime and the efforts in disarmament and arms control and how to straighten out the relationship between the control of legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms and the fight against illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms.

I. The mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee in the relevant General Assembly resolutions

11. In its resolution 53/111 of 9 December 1998, entitled “Transnational organized crime”, the General Assembly decided to establish an intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments on three issues, including combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition. In its resolution 53/114 of 9 December 1998, entitled “Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity”, the Assembly called upon the Ad Hoc Committee to devote attention to the drafting of the main text of the convention against transnational organized crime, as well as, as appropriate, of international instruments on the three issues, including combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition.

12. In its resolution 54/126 of 17 December 1999, entitled “Draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the draft protocols thereto”, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work in accordance with resolutions 53/111 and 53/114 and to intensify its work in order to complete it in 2000. In the same resolution, the Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee to schedule sufficient time for the negotiation of the three draft protocols to the Convention, including the draft Firearms Protocol, in order to enhance the possibility of their completion at the same time as the draft Convention.

13. Taking into account the above-mentioned resolutions, China maintains that the Firearms Protocol should be developed, within the framework of the negotiation of the draft United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, primarily to prevent and combat crime and that the purpose of the Firearms Protocol should be strictly confined to combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition. The above-mentioned General Assembly resolutions do not require Member States to restrict their legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms and still less to expand the scope of the definition of the term “firearms”. Restricting the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms is, in essence, an arms control issue. If the definition of the term “firearms” is expanded to cover landmines, missiles or other conventional weapons, a series of problems will arise in the development of the draft Firearms Protocol. Given that the terms “landmines” and “missiles” have their own definitions, to incorporate them into the definition of “firearms” would give rise to confusion regarding the concepts involved and would cause the Firearms Protocol to lose its focus. Moreover, there already exist international legal instruments that place restrictions on landmines and other weapons. To make different provisions within the framework of the Firearms Protocol would create confusion from a legal standpoint, making it difficult for the States Parties to implement the relevant provisions of the Protocol in the future.

14. In sum, developing the draft Firearms Protocol strictly in accordance with the mandate in the relevant General Assembly resolution is the key to success in the negotiation of the Protocol and will have a direct bearing on its universality.

II. The relationship between efforts aimed at preventing and combating crimes and efforts in arms control and disarmament

15. There are ongoing discussions on combating through arms control and disarmament the illicit transfer of small arms. The Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms has submitted a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session (A/54/258). In addition, at its 1999 session, the Disarmament Commission adopted by consensus the guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N.¹ The above-mentioned report and guidelines have, from an arms control and disarmament perspective, already covered some measures on small arms.

16. China is of the view that there are both similarities and differences between the above-mentioned efforts in arms control and disarmament and efforts in combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms for the purpose of preventing and combating crime. In both cases, the efforts are aimed at promoting security. The main difference lies in the fact that the efforts aimed at preventing and combating crimes are focused on safeguarding public security and combating criminal activities involving the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms so as to ensure the well-being of nations; however, the arms control and disarmament efforts are focused primarily on safeguarding the military security of each country, allowing the legal manufacture and transfer of arms to fulfil its legitimate defence needs. And the measures taken in the two fields are different in terms of their focus and priority.

17. In accordance with the mandate in the relevant General Assembly resolutions, the Ad Hoc Committee should confine its work on the draft Firearms Protocol to the area of preventing and combating crime in its drafting of each article of the Protocol. China is opposed to any attempt to go beyond the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee and indiscriminately expand the scope of the definition of such basic concepts as firearms, as well as the scope of application of the Firearms Protocol, under the pretext of preventing and combating crime. Likewise, China is opposed to any attempt to turn the Protocol into a mechanism for controlling the manufacture, import, export or transfer of all conventional weapons other than heavy weapons.

III. The relationship between the control of the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms and the fight against the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms

18. It is true that the control of the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms is, to some extent, related to the fight against the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms and that appropriate management and regulation of the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms are conducive to curbing and combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms. It is nevertheless undesirable to put the cart before the horse. If the Firearms Protocol includes undue restrictions on the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms, it will not only go beyond the mandate in the relevant General Assembly resolutions, but it will also deviate from its original purposes. Should that be the case, it will not be possible to curb effectively the illicit activities targeted in the Protocol; at the same time, however, legitimate activities may, as a result, be affected, thus rendering the Protocol meaningless.

19. Furthermore, each sovereign State should decide how to control or regulate the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms on its territory. Given that conditions may vary from one country to another, the judiciary systems, laws and regulations may also vary from one country to another. Moreover, measures and systems suitable to one country or region may not be applicable to or effective in other countries or regions. Therefore, in developing the Protocol, it is, in principle, undesirable to introduce restrictions on the legitimate manufacturing and transfer of firearms in a country, and it is even less desirable to seek a common approach to be followed in each and every country or region.

IV. The deadline for the conclusion of the negotiations on the Firearms Protocol

20. In its resolution 54/126, the General Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee to intensify its work in order to complete it in 2000. However, given the gravity and complexity of the issue of illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, China maintains that the Ad Hoc Committee should, in the first place, regard as its primary objective the drafting of a good, comprehensive protocol that can offer genuine solutions to problems. While striving to conclude its work on the Firearms Protocol at an early date, the Ad Hoc Committee should nevertheless attach more importance to the quality of the Protocol, so that, where possible, the concerns of the various parties may be addressed. Otherwise, the universality of the Firearms Protocol will be affected, even if it is possible to conclude a hasty agreement, as such a protocol will hardly be able to meet the concerns of the various parties. That, in the view of China, would not be conducive to strengthening cooperation among States in combating illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, thus making it difficult to achieve the original objective of the Firearms Protocol.

21. The delegation of China is ready to cooperate actively and to work together with all other delegations in a common effort to enable the Ad Hoc Committee to conclude early its work on a protocol that will meet the concerns of all parties.
