II. THE 1995 UNITED NATIONS POPULATION AWARD

8. A total of 11 nominations were received for the 1995 United Nations Population Award from qualified nominators. After a thorough review of the nominations, and taking into account the views offered by the honorary members, the Committee for the United Nations Population Award selected Dr. Halfdan Mahler of Denmark and the Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children as the 1995 laureates.

9. Dr. Halfdan Mahler of Denmark was chosen by the Committee for his distinguished career in public health which has included strong leadership in reproductive health, family planning and world-wide population issues. He served as Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) from 1973 until 1988. In that capacity, he established the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction (HRP) which mobilized the scientific and health community in a global partnership to help developing countries to meet the health needs of the populations, particularly in the field of fertility regulation. Under his leadership, WHO promoted the concept of primary health care with family planning and reproductive health as important components. Since 1989, he has been Secretary-General of the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). He has made significant contributions to increasing public awareness of health and population questions and to improving reproductive health/family planning programmes. He played an important role in the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development, including the preparatory meetings, and has helped to shape the new global consensus which emerged from those meetings.

10. The Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children (IAC), an Ethiopia-based non-governmental organization, was chosen for its efforts to create the social, cultural and public health conditions that allow women to exercise their reproductive rights, including the practice of family planning. IAC was founded in Senegal in 1984 to fight traditional practices that are harmful to the health of women and children, especially female genital mutilation. Since then active national committees have been established in 23 African countries. These committees have sponsored a number of activities including workshops, media talks, and training for nurses and traditional birth attendants. IAC conducts research and encourages programmes to combat harmful traditional practices relating to pregnancy and delivery, social and nutritional taboos, early childhood marriages and teenage pregnancy. The organization also promotes traditional practices such as prolonged breast-feeding and baby massage which are beneficial to the health of women and children.
