8. The Acting President circulated his concluding summary, which was subsequently issued as document E/1998/91. The text read as follows:

Summary conclusions by the Acting President of the Council

“1. Before trying to summarize the many innovative ideas that have emerged from this meeting, let me repeat how delighted we at the Economic and Social Council are that so many ministers and high-level officers participated in this meeting.

“2. Its success is testimony to the tenacious efforts of those who have worked for months to make it possible – first and foremost, the Secretary-General, Mr. Kofi Annan, the wizard of peace, as he was called by an Italian newspaper, whose invitation attracted so many distinguished guests.

“3. Next, the President of the Council, Ambassador Juan Somavía, who though unable to be with us today, conceived and followed every step in the preparations for this important encounter. May I also express my most sincere gratitude to the other members of the Bureau: Ambassador Anwarul Chowdhury of Bangladesh, Ambassador Roble Olhaye of Djibouti and Ambassador Alyaksandr Sychou of Belarus, as well as Mr. Nitin Desai, Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs. I would like also to especially thank the members of the Council secretariat, the interpreters and support staff for making this meeting possible. They deserve commendation for their hard work on this project.

“4. One theme running through today’s dialogue has been the recognition that globalization has changed the world and that the world must respond. Within this broad framework, our discussions this morning have been driven to a large extent by the repercussions of the so-called Asian crisis. I say “so-called” because it is agreed that we live in an increasingly integrated world and that turmoil anywhere poses risks to all countries around the globe. Nobody, but nobody, can ensure his or her safety from its spillover effects. There is universal recognition that global financial integration is not an option – it is a historical shift. Global financial integration offers great opportunities but also great challenges; it offers benefits but it also poses great risks.

“5. The Asian crisis has resulted in great attention being given to the sharing of risks and benefits in times of financial turmoil. The question of financial burden-sharing in times of crisis is a complicated and technical issue which will have to be addressed in other forums. However, our discussions have also highlighted the need for a sharing of benefits and risks over the longer term. Several speakers have reminded us of the contribution – that is to say, the benefits – of global financial integration to Asia’s overall economic success and to the reduction in poverty over the past few decades; but there are also long-term risks – the risk of marginalization, the risk that some countries or individuals may be left behind. There must be a sharing of these long-term benefits and risks. Global financial integration should be to the benefit of all countries and all peoples; and we must all work together to reduce the risks of marginalization. I believe that the discussions this morning have demonstrated, encouragingly, a growing consensus on the means to maximize such benefits so as to reduce these potential risks.

“6. In the short term, there continue to be different points of view about the reasons for the recent crisis and the most appropriate ways of responding to it. Nevertheless, appreciation was expressed for the prompt response to the crisis by the international community, led by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank. At the same time, there was universal recognition that the initial financial crisis has developed wide-ranging economic and social dimensions. There was widespread and deep concern about the adverse consequences of financial crises for vulnerable groups and the profound consequences for poverty. There was unanimity that special efforts need to be made to protect the poor and other vulnerable groups in times of crisis. The alleviation of poverty must remain our ultimate objective, both in the long run and over the short term.

“7. Our discussions this morning have demonstrated that all of us – international institutions and national Governments – still have much to learn about responding to the forces of global financial integration. While many questions remain, we agree that there is a need to strengthen the global architecture, that prevention is better than cure, and that actions are required at both the international and the national levels. The wide-ranging nature of the fallout from the crisis calls for a collective response involving all our institutions to varying degrees. A number of interesting and innovative ideas were presented, demonstrating that this meeting has provided an important opportunity to exchange views on the types of action that need to be taken by us, individually and collectively.

“8. There seems to be universal agreement that more information, greater transparency and improved monitoring are indispensable in reducing the possibility of financial crises. I believe that this meeting has demonstrated, equally, the need to develop the flows of information and transparency between our institutions. There were many references to the need for policy coherence and partnership at all levels, but particularly between our institutions. There was a consensus that greater efforts need to be made to integrate the financial, economic, social and political policies and strategies.

“9. The reason for the Economic and Social Council’s originally being conceived by the fathers of the United Nations, the vision and motivation driving recent efforts to renew the economic and social sectors, and the inspiration behind today’s meeting have all been focused on a single goal: to make this world a better place to live in for all the people of the planet by giving the developing countries, especially the least developed countries, a better chance to improve their well-being. We must continue to pool all our efforts to eradicate poverty and pave the way towards a future of sustainable development. Development must remain the top priority of the United Nations.”

20. At the same meeting, statements were made by the representatives of the following non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council: International Federation of Settlements and Neighborhood Centres (Special), International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (General) and International Sociological Association (Roster).

21. At the 11th meeting, on 15 May, the Council held a panel discussion on the role of non-governmental organizations in the integrated and coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits.

22. Presentations were made by the following non-governmental organizations: Non-Governmental Organization Steering Committee for the Commission on Sustainable Development, United Methodist Office for the United Nations, Instituto del Tercer Mundo/Social Watch, Women's Environment and Development Organization, and the Center for Population and Family Health of the School of Public Health of Columbia University. In the course of the ensuing discussion, interventions were made and questions raised by the representatives of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Lebanon and Zambia.

23. At the same meeting, the President of the Council presented the following summary of the session:

Summary by the President of the Council

“Introduction

“1. This session of the Economic and Social Council was of historic significance. Never in the history of the Council have so many key actors come together to have a dialogue, and to exchange views, on subject matter that drives so much of the work of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. Chairs of the functional commissions, of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) task forces and standing committees, and of the executive boards of the funds and programmes as well as the executive heads of the funds and programmes and of the regional commissions, and representatives of civil society – all have contributed in a constructive, frank and open way to the success of this session. The session has provided a wealth of material from which the Council can draw and upon which it can build when it meets again on this subject at its substantive session of 1998 in July. Together with the report of the Secretary-General, which not only is comprehensive in scope but also contains many new ideas and proposals, the Council is now well positioned to tackle the all-important subject of conference follow-up and implementation.

“2. The Charter of the United Nations gives the Council the all-important role of providing coordination in general and of giving guidance and oversight to its subsidiary bodies in particular. For a long time, the Council has fallen short in performing this essential task and only in recent years has it begun to reassert itself in carrying out this role.

“3. This special session of the Council has given further evidence that the Council is becoming increasingly effective in carrying out its key role in ensuring that the follow-up to global conferences is well integrated, coordinated and effective. In no small way, this session is carrying forward the reform of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields as set out in General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B.

“4. The Council sits at the apex of the configuration of United Nations activities in the economic, social and related fields and as such has a crucial role to play from both a policy coordination standpoint and a management forum function. At the same time, integrating conference follow-up is a daunting task, which requires time, and in-depth examination, and the Council needs to reflect on how best to achieve it. Furthermore, the task at hand is now shifting towards implementation and monitoring of results.

“5. The breadth and depth of this task were clearly brought out in the deliberations and can be captured in the following six broad areas, namely (a) cross-cutting issues; (b) coordination and management role of the Council, in particular vis-à-vis its functional commissions and the executive boards of the funds and programmes; (c) inter-agency coordination; (d) country-level follow-up; (e) regional-level follow-up; and (f) monitoring. Under each of these broad areas, a wealth of detailed suggestions, proposals and recommendations have been made and these are reflected below:

“I. Cross-cutting issues

- Poverty eradication and improving the living conditions of people everywhere should be the overriding objective of the Council’s efforts to ensure an integrated and coordinated follow-up to conferences.
- In its role of overseeing the coordinated follow-up to conferences and summits, the Council will have to strike a proper balance between the specificity of each of the conferences and summits, which have their own specific and highly committed constituencies, and the need to address cross-cutting issues.
- It is important to maintain a balance between cross-sectoral and sectoral issues in conference follow-up. In addition, it is important that, in the coordinated follow-up, no single issue receive special attention over others. Selectivity in implementing commitments should be avoided.

“A. Resources

- In focusing on cross-cutting issues, the Council has a special advantage over its functional commissions. The Council could use the various goals and targets as its organizing principle for monitoring progress in conference implementation.
- Linking the goals and targets to the issues of financing and assistance in achieving the commitments made at the conferences would be especially important, particularly in light of the decline in official development assistance (ODA).
- The decline in resources for conference implementation needs to be addressed by the Council, as well as the effective use and results of resource utilization, based, inter alia, on reports by funds and programmes.

“B. Civil society

- Involvement of civil society in an effective way in the intergovernmental conference follow-up process is essential in view of the significant role that members of civil society have played in the conferences themselves as well as in their follow-up and implementation, particularly at the country level. The private sector should be involved as well, in calling upon civil society to take social concerns into account as regards the activities of its members.
- The Council should take the lead in promoting greater involvement of civil society in the work and activities of the United Nations. Panels at the Council could systematically include one representative of civil society and ways could be explored for non-governmental organizations to bring certain issues to the attention of the Council.
- Strengthening and adequately funding of the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Service (NGLS) could also be considered.

“II. Coordination and management role of the Council

- The Council, in its management function, should provide more effective guidance to its functional commissions and particularly to the executive boards of the funds and programmes that are responsible, together with specialized agencies and all other partners, for facilitating conference implementation at the country level.

“A. Functional commissions

- As a matter of urgency, the Council needs to start a process, through a dialogue with all bureaux of functional commissions, of structuring and coordinating the preparations for forthcoming five-year reviews of conferences and of ensuring that the knowledge and expertise available in the whole system will be fully used in that process.
- Substantive interaction among commissions and with the Council needs to be further enhanced. The Council needs to consider commissions' outcomes in an integrated manner, and to identify conflicting approaches to providing guidance. It should also make greater use of substantive outcomes of its commissions in its own work.
- New developments have been occurring since the conferences took place: it would be useful for functional commissions to have an agenda item on emerging issues.
- Commissions have consistently improved their working methods, but there is scope for still further progress, in particular by refocusing general debates and expanding the interaction with civil society and experts.
- To ensure greater follow-up to commissions' outcomes, the Council could report every year on the principal outcomes of the functional commissions as regards follow-up to conferences, for transmission to funds, programmes and agencies, and broader dissemination.

- The Council should find ways of ensuring early availability of functional commissions' outcomes, so that they can be used in other forums. The Secretariat should clarify the legal status of these outcomes before the Council endorses them.
- The Secretariat should be actively involved in ensuring the coordination of functional commissions. This includes circulation of documentation and outcomes and a more proactive assistance in coordination.

“B. Bureaux of the functional commissions

- Transmitting outputs and reports is not sufficient to ensure coordination. Commissions and their bureaux need to develop a culture of using other functional commissions' outcomes in their work. Personal interaction among bureau members – including having the chair of one functional commission attend the session of another commission – is essential.
- Greater interaction between the Bureau of the Council and the bureaux of functional commissions is essential. The Bureau of the Council could meet with chairpersons of functional commissions, in January or in May, to coordinate the work of the upcoming sessions and their preparations.
- Meetings between incoming and outgoing bureaux of functional commissions are important for continuity of work. For improved sessions' preparation, more functional commissions could consider electing their bureaux at the end of their session.
- Bureaux of functional commissions need to keep all member States fully informed on sessions' preparations. A mixed composition of bureaux balanced between capital experts and members of permanent missions could help maintain the commissions' expertise while enabling greater interaction with other bureaux.

“C. Executive boards of the funds and programmes

- Linking the normative and operational parts of the work of the United Nations system remains a key challenge for conference implementation. Guidance by the Council has to become more focused and relevant to the activities of the funds and programmes, in particular in the context of the triennial policy review and agreed conclusions on conference follow-up. Enhanced interaction with executive boards of funds and programmes and with country teams could assist in this regard.
- The respective guidance roles of the Council and of the executive boards of funds and programmes should be further clarified. The Council could be the forum for high-level dialogue on broad, cross-cutting development themes, and could give guidance to the executive boards on the follow-up to global conferences. The Council should also address cross-cutting policy issues relating to operational activities as well as to resources.
- The executive boards should concentrate on management and funding issues, with the focus mainly on downstream coordination, thereby having a role in contributing to the implementation of outcomes of the conferences at the country level.
- Reports to the Council by the executive boards should be more analytical in order to permit the Council to fulfil its coordination role. Less emphasis should be placed on process in these reports, with more space given to factual analysis.

- The executive boards should invite the Council to transmit recommendations back to the boards on ways to better interact with the Council.

“III. Inter-agency coordination

- The coordinating role of the Council and the active leadership of ACC are of utmost importance to inter-agency coordination in view of the fact that the conferences have provided the programmatic basis for such coordination in terms of joint action, analysis and implementation.
- The follow-up to global conferences often requires collaboration or joint programming, but mechanisms for funding such initiatives are not always available. Therefore, the Council should encourage the mobilization of resources for coordination purposes and joint activities. Special-purpose arrangements and round tables could be needed for funding specific programmes or themes.

“A. ACC task forces

- The ACC task forces have been particularly important in translating the conference goals to the field level and their results should be more fully disseminated.
- The resident coordinator system needs to use the task forces’ outputs, in particular in preparing programming frameworks, and to disseminate them to Governments and other partners. Use by regional commissions is also important. Feedback on the use of these outputs in specific country situations is important in order to adapt, update or supplement them.
- Guidance by the Council is required to ensure that effective successor arrangements for the task forces are in place. The ACC standing machinery, and the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) in particular, is taking over from these task forces and is carrying forward their results.
- Follow-up to the work of the task forces should also include the use of networks of United Nations system organizations. Such networks make use of tasks managers, enable Headquarters and country coordination, and use information technology and liaise with ACC.

“B. ACC standing committees

- ACC standing committees should pursue and enhance their efforts to support policy development based on conference outcomes and to develop guidance for country-level staff. They should also address further the issue of resource mobilization.
- Regular interaction between the inter-agency committees on women and gender equality, and on sustainable development, and the CCPOQ is important. Overall, it is considered that strengthening the system-wide gender perspective remains an item of unfinished business of coordination.
- Communication and interaction should be enhanced between the two executive committees (the Executive Committee for Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Development Group (UNDG)), and between them and ACC standing bodies, in particular CCPOQ and the Inter-agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality (IACWGE), in order to link the broader system with the executive committees’ work.

“C. ACC and the Council

- The interaction between the Council and ACC requires further improvement and ACC's activities should become more transparent and there should be a more intensive interaction between ACC and its subsidiary machinery and the Council. Regular arrangements to facilitate interaction between the Secretariat and Member States on the activities of ACC could be established.

“D. Specialized agencies

- The Council needs to strengthen its interaction with the specialized agencies, and to enhance their participation in the sessions of the Council. As agencies have their own governing structures and mandate, the Council should enhance its interaction with the specialized agencies' governing bodies as well.
- The establishment of institutional ties between funds and programmes and specialized agencies, and between them and the Council, represents a major issue.

“IV. Country-level follow-up

- Field-level implementation is ultimately the most important issue. National Governments have a key role in implementing conferences at the country level, and the United Nations system has an important role as facilitator. Besides lack of financial resources, coordination of national conference follow-up remains a problem in many countries. A major issue at the field level for the follow-up to global conferences is the availability of national capacities. Capacity-building initiatives should be promoted.
- The extent to which national-level implementation has been successful could be highlighted through having reports by the Secretariat on the various national experiences on progress in conference follow-up transmitted to the Council for its consideration.
- The resident coordinators play a crucial role in integrating the United Nations system's action to support national conference implementation. The follow-up of major United Nations conferences should be part of their mandate. The resident coordinator system should foster a broad dialogue and support the involvement of a wide range of parties in the follow-up to global conferences, including Governments, civil society and other donors. A joint situation analysis of where a country stands on conference follow-up may be carried out together with the Government. The resident coordinator system also has a role in promoting initiatives to build national capacity for conference implementation.
- The role of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) in the follow-up to global conferences has been confirmed. The involvement of the specialized agencies in the UNDAF process, within the resident coordinator system, should be enhanced in order to ensure better country-level coordination.
- Outputs of ACC task forces and ACC's standardized guidance are useful tools in enhancing the efforts already undertaken by the United Nations country teams for conference implementation. Directives for gender-mainstreaming need to be translated into practical guidelines for field staff.
- The annual reports of the resident coordinators should be used as a monitoring tool and to disseminate examples of best practices, while bearing in mind that the variety of country experiences should be reflected therein.
- Training of country teams on follow-up to global conferences should be encouraged through a wider use of the United Nations Staff College.

- Further identification of conference cross-cutting themes, and corresponding indicators, could also help national action. It would be useful to issue a report highlighting the main commitments of conferences as well as a few best practices for implementation. National handbooks on national implementation of global agendas could also be developed.
- The partnership and cooperation between the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions need to be further enhanced in conference follow-up at country level, in close consultation with the Government and with relevant-other development actors. The recently decided participation of the World Bank in two UNDAF exercises, where the relation between UNDAF and country assistance strategies will be explored, should be further encouraged.
- The implementation of conference outcomes in countries in a post-conflict situation needs to be examined. The Council could pay particular attention to implementation in countries as they move from a crisis situation to rehabilitation and long-term development.

“V. Regional-level follow-up

- The regional and subregional dimensions of the follow-up to conferences require further expansion and improvement as most attention has thus far been paid to global and country perspectives.
- The Council has a role to play in stimulating follow-up by the regional commissions, and in ensuring that the regional commissions use the functional commissions’ work and address all conferences. This requires greater involvement of the regional commissions in the work of the Council on global conferences.
- Mechanisms are needed for making the results of the regional-level deliberations better known to the Council. In this regard, the Chairman of the group of regional commissions could address the Council annually.
- The activities of the regional commissions in the follow-up to conferences should be carried out on a more systematic basis. The regional commissions’ interaction with other parts of the United Nations system needs to be clarified, particularly with regard to the funds and programmes.

“VI. Monitoring

- In order to effectively monitor progress in the implementation of conferences at the country level, there is an urgent need for the multilateral system to develop a coherent set of basic indicators, as well as a need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system and of countries to collect and analyse statistics. The United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD/DAC) are urged to develop and apply common indicators to the maximum extent possible.
- The Council, possibly at a future meeting of its coordination segment, could review ongoing work in the area of statistics and indicators, in order to ensure coherence and to stimulate further advances in the area of social indicators in particular.

“Conclusion

“6. In conclusion, it would appear that a number of challenges have to be confronted in order to ensure not only an effective follow-up to global conferences but also, and in particular, their implementation at the country level. Five challenges can be identified:

“(a) Ensuring horizontal integration;

“(b) Financing for the conference action plans as well as for horizontal cross-cutting follow-up efforts;

“(c) Need to address the insufficiency of relevant statistical data;

“(d) Need for more involvement of civil society;

“(e) Mainstreaming of gender and incorporation of human rights as cross-cutting themes in the follow-up process.”

Chapter IV

High-level segment

Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization

1. The high-level segment was held from 6 to 8 July 1998 (12th to 18th meetings of the Council). An account of the proceedings is contained in the relevant summary records (E/1998/SR.12-18). The Council had before it the following documents:

(a) World Economic and Social Survey, 1998 (E/1998/50 and Corr.1-3);

(b) Note by the Secretary-General submitting to the Economic and Social Council the report prepared by the secretariats of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization on market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization (E/1998/55).

2. At the 12th meeting, on 6 July, the Secretary-General addressed the Council.

3. At the 12th and 13th meetings, on 6 July, the Council held a policy dialogue and discussion on important developments in the world economy and international economic cooperation with the heads of the multilateral financial and trade institutions of the United Nations system. Statements were made at the 12th meeting, on 6 July, by the panellists, the Chairman of the Executive Board and Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, the President of the World Bank/International Finance Corporation and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. At the 13th meeting, on 6 July, a statement was made by the Deputy Director-General of the World Trade Organization, also a panellist.

4. At the 15th meeting, on 7 July, the Council held a panel discussion entitled "Market access: prospective beyond the Uruguay Round". The Deputy Secretary-General of the United Nations moderated the discussion. The members of the Council entered into a dialogue after the presentations by the panellists, F. Bergsten, Director of the Institute for International Economics; J. Bhagwati of Columbia University; and M. Livanos Cattai, Secretary-General of the International Chamber of Commerce.

Action taken by the Council

5. At the 18th meeting, on 8 July, the Council adopted the draft ministerial communiqué submitted by the President (E/1998/L.13). The Council decided to annex the President's summary of the high-level segment to the communiqué. The text read as follows:

Ministerial communiqué of the high-level segment submitted by the President of the Council

“We, the Ministers and Heads of Delegations participating in the high-level policy dialogue and the high-level segment of the substantive session of 1998 of the Economic and Social Council, held from 6 to 8 July 1998, having considered the theme ‘Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization’, have adopted the following communiqué:

“1. Fifty years ago, the multilateral trading system was established as the result of a process that had begun at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, which was held pursuant to a resolution of the Economic and Social Council, adopted by the Council at its first session, in 1946, in which the Council called for a conference to draft a convention for the establishment of an international trade organization. Over the succeeding decades, the multilateral trading system made an important contribution to growth, employment and stability by promoting the liberalization and expansion of trade and by providing a framework for the conduct of international trade relations. Today, we reaffirm and renew our commitment to uphold and strengthen the system which contributes to the economic and social advancement of all countries and peoples.

“2. The continued marginalization of the least developed countries concerns us deeply. Arresting and reversing their marginalization, and promoting their expeditious integration into the world economy, constitute an ethical imperative for the international community. We will work together towards further enhanced market access for their exports within the context of supporting their own efforts at capacity-building. We therefore welcome the initiatives taken by the World Trade Organization in cooperation with other organizations to implement the Plan of Action for the Least Developed Countries, including through effective follow-up of the High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for Least Developed Countries’ Trade Development, held in October 1997. We recognize that full implementation of the Plan of Action requires further progress towards duty-free imports from least developed countries. We also invite the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Trade Centre (ITC), the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and other relevant organizations to provide enhanced technical assistance to help strengthen the supply capacity of the least developed countries and to help them take the fullest possible advantage of trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization.

“3. The Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations resulted in a more open, rule-based and predictable multilateral trading system and in significant improvements in market access conditions. Furthermore, since the establishment of the World Trade Organization, important multilateral negotiations have been concluded that have increased market access for information technology products, basic telecommunications services, and financial services. In addition, the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization, which strengthens the rule-based multilateral trading system, provides effective recourse to members with regard to defending their market access rights.

“4. However, significant non-tariff and tariff barriers and high variance, with tariff peaks and tariff escalation, still affect a notable range of products and sectors, particularly ones of export interest to developing countries, including the least developed countries. The degree of market access commitments in trade in services varies considerably. Future trade negotiations should take these issues into account with a view to securing further broad-based trade liberalization for the benefit of everyone. Resort to trade actions in the form of contingency measures, such as anti-dumping duties and countervailing duties, and of unilateral actions should be subject to increased multilateral surveillance so that they respect and are consistent with multilateral rules and obligations.

“5. Important gains in market access for developing countries’ exports have been achieved through regional trading agreements which have built upon increased disciplines and tariff concessions resulting from the Uruguay Round. Bearing in mind the primacy of the multilateral trading system, and the importance of open regional economic integration, regional trade agreements should be outward-oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system.

“6. We stress the importance of effective application by all members of the World Trade Organization of all provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations,¹ taking into account the specific interests of developing countries and in this respect reiterate the need for the effective implementation of the special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in favour of developing country members, in particular the least developed among them. The Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) remains a major instrument for further improving market access of developing countries; there is scope and need for further improvement of the GSP, especially for the least developed countries.

“7. We recall that the second Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization decided to establish a process to ensure full and faithful implementation of existing agreements and to prepare for the third Ministerial Conference. In this regard, we stress the importance of the submission by the General Council of the World Trade Organization of recommendations regarding the work programme of the World Trade Organization, including further liberalization sufficiently broad-based to respond to the range of interests and concerns of all members of the organization within the framework of the World Trade Organization, that will enable the members to take decisions at the third Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization. The second Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization also decided that the General Council of the World Trade Organization would establish a comprehensive work programme to examine all trade-related issues relating to global electronic commerce. In this regard, we stress the importance of assisting developing countries in capacity-building and the development of their services infrastructure, in order to enable them to maximize the benefits they could derive from electronic commerce. Countries with economies in transition also need such assistance. We call upon UNCTAD, in collaboration with other organizations, to provide appropriate analytical support and technical assistance to developing countries in this area.

“8. We strongly underline the need to provide technical assistance to developing countries for capacity-building in trade negotiations and in taking fullest possible advantage of the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization. We acknowledge with appreciation the assistance given by UNCTAD to developing countries through its policy research and analysis and technical assistance and we invite UNCTAD to continue to provide such support, including assisting developing countries in formulating a positive agenda for future trade negotiations.

“9. We attach great importance to the diversification of African economies and increased market access for their export products. In this regard, we express our appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for recently putting forward an action-oriented agenda for the development of Africa. Continued efforts are needed to enhance market access for products of export interest to Africa and to support the African economies’ efforts at diversification and building of supply capacity.

“10. We are concerned about the financial crisis afflicting a number of countries, with its serious implications for world economic and trading prospects. There is a need for improved measures to address the negative effects of the volatility of international capital flows on the international trading system and the development prospects of developing countries. Keeping all markets open and maintaining continued growth in world trade are key elements in overcoming this crisis. In this context, we reject the use of any protectionist measures. Consideration should be given to the trade financing needs of the countries affected by the crisis to enable them to import essential items. It is important that the momentum towards increased trade liberalization, particularly as regards products of interest to developing countries, be maintained, and be given attention in the work leading up to the third Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization. At a broader level, there is a need for greater coherence between the development objectives agreed to by the international community and the functioning of the international trading and financial system. To this end, we call for close cooperation among the United Nations, and multilateral trade and international financial institutions. An important step in this direction was the convening of the special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, on 18 April 1998.

“11. While noting that multilateral trade agreements have contributed to security of market access for members of the World Trade Organization, we recognize that such security is not enjoyed by non-members, including those seeking accession to the organization. We emphasize the importance of attainment of the universality of the multilateral trading system and the need for government members of the World Trade Organization and relevant international organizations to provide assistance to non-members of the World Trade Organization, so as to facilitate their efforts with respect to accession in an expeditious and transparent manner on the basis of World Trade Organization-related rights and obligations. The World Trade Organization and UNCTAD are invited to provide the necessary technical assistance to these countries in this regard.

“12. We welcome the development of a collaborative and complementary relationship between UNCTAD and the World Trade Organization, which augurs well for the multilateral trading system and for effective integration therein of developing countries, including the least developed countries. We also express our appreciation to the secretariats of UNCTAD and the World Trade Organization for jointly preparing their excellent report (E/1998/55) for the high-level segment.”

Annex

Summary of the high-level segment by the President of the Council

“1. The high-level segment of the substantive session of 1998 of the Economic and Social Council took place from 6 to 8 July 1998. Following opening statements by the President of the Council and by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Council held a high-level policy dialogue with the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the President of the World Bank, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Deputy Director-General of the World Trade Organization on developments in the world economy. Upon conclusion of the high-level policy dialogue with the heads of the international financial institutions and the trade organizations, the Council conducted a high-level debate on the theme of ‘Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization’, at the closing of which the Council, for the first time in its history, adopted a ministerial communiqué.

“2. A panel discussion moderated by the Deputy-Secretary-General was held on 7 July; the panellists were Mr. F. Bergsten, Director, Institute for International Economics; J. Bhagwati, Professor, Columbia University; and Ms. M. Livanos Cattau, Secretary-General, International Chamber of Commerce. The subject of the panel was ‘Market access: perspective beyond the Uruguay Round’.

“I. Opening statements

“3. The President of the Council in his opening statement referred to the current economic crisis in Asia which had made it clear that integration into the global market could bring great benefits, but carried serious risks if not managed well. No country was able to remain insulated from the consequences of events occurring elsewhere. It was of paramount importance to develop a global rapid response capacity in which Governments and international institutions together with the private sector, trade unions and civil society organizations could cooperate to effectively forestall crises and address them expeditiously when they occurred. The current strains in the international financial and trading system served to highlight the need to orient the forces of globalization towards greater balance among the imperatives of economic growth, social equity, workers’ rights, gender equality and environmental protection. This posed a global challenge to all international institutions and tested the effectiveness of the multilateral system as a whole.

“4. He stressed that by now it was abundantly clear no single international organization or country, acting individually, with its own set of policy measures and its own interpretation of events, had any meaningful chance to help steer the world towards greater economic and social stability. It was necessary to progressively develop an integrated policy outlook reflecting common objectives of the international community. It was not possible to pursue independent sectoral policies to deal with integrated, multifaceted and systemic problems. This and future policy dialogues, the President observed, provided an opportunity for the Council to help develop a shared understanding of issues and devise a broad policy orientation to address them.

“5. The Secretary-General in his statement noted that global conditions today offered unprecedented prospects for peace and security. Yet, the international community seemed ill-equipped to fully harness that tremendous potential. Tremendous wealth existed alongside chronic destitution. People around the world were torn between the hopes engendered by decades of remarkable progress and the fear of future upheavals. Those hopes and fears were global, as were the economy and markets. However, politics were local and there was a widening gap between what citizens demanded and what Governments could deliver. While there was every reason to treasure and nurture the achievements brought about by the international trading system, the Asian crisis was a reminder of how factors such as finance, economics and socio-political forces were working in tandem to shape, and, at times, shake up the world.

“6. The Secretary-General stated that for the United Nations three broad observations were paramount. First, the crisis had had its most devastating effect on the marginalization of society. It threatened to undo years of progress in alleviating poverty and advancing the rights of women. Second, developing countries were less able than their developed counterparts to withstand the fallout of the crisis. Third, interdependence among nations had an essential complement – interdependence among issues. Finance, trade, governance and social equity were intimately linked.

“7. The open, inclusive, global economy was the most promising means of widely spreading the benefits of globalization, the Secretary-General stressed. At the same time, the fear of globalization had to be taken seriously. The challenge for Governments was to show that global imperatives could coexist with local needs. Choices had to be made between the confinement to purely local points of view and the adoption of a more global perspective. One key question was whether the international community would choose to use the institutions at its disposal. There was really no choice, as it would be grievous for the international community to retreat from multilateralism.

“II. Policy dialogue

“8. The Managing Director of IMF stated that the international community must support the adjustment programmes of the countries most severely affected by the Asian crisis. It was also vital that countries with balance-of-payment surpluses recycle those surpluses in the form of untied loans and humanitarian aid to countries in the process of adjustment. As creditors, they should stand ready to grant generous terms for the restructuring of their claims and support economic recovery in Asia through new loans. Above all, those countries should keep their markets open. Countries that pursued strong, progressive trade liberalization, in the context of general economic reforms and market-oriented policies, would achieve growth and increased trade performance. For their part, industrialized countries should liberalize import restrictions. However, they should avoid replacing tariffs and non-tariff barriers with administered protection measures, such as anti-dumping restrictions.

“9. Working with the World Bank, IMF was exploring ways to accelerate public enterprise and financial sector reforms, to improve the assessment of medium-term investments needs and the capacity to absorb external financing, and to identify potential adverse social consequences of reforms. In order to make the world less prone to financial crises, the Fund’s surveillance had to become more effective and the transparency of international finance had to be enhanced. IMF could play a central role in crisis prevention by encouraging members to strengthen their macroeconomic policies and financial sectors.

“10. The President of the World Bank stated that the Bank had sought to assist the countries hardest-hit by the Asian financial crisis. The crisis was not localized and issues in South-East Asia had affected all countries in different ways. The World Bank had also focused on the structural and social aspect of the crisis, with particular attention to poverty-related matters. Attempts had been made to deal with the segments of the economy most affected, including rural areas, so as to ensure provision of basic social programming that offered people a sense of hope. There could be no peace and stability without social stability and hope. Efforts were under way in the financial, judicial and regulatory systems to provide a framework essential for the success of the work of IMF. Before gaining access to markets, countries must establish a fundamental economic base, including infrastructure and a capacity to attract foreign investment. Helping countries to build such a framework was one of the essential functions of the World Bank. Also, transparency between borrower and lender countries was necessary in order to avoid the distortions that came from corruption, crime and the divergence of funds.

“11. The Secretary-General of UNCTAD stressed that the Asian crisis had hit the poor particularly hard, in terms of sharp falls in commodities and in the export prices of some goods. The recent financial crises had occurred because the Governments concerned, among others, had failed to manage their countries’ integration into the capital markets. Well-calibrated national policies could help manage financial crises, limit their potential for lasting damage and re-establish economic growth. Yet, when an economic crisis became a systemic problem, action was also needed at the global level. The Asian crisis was only the latest in a string of financial crises that had disrupted the global economy since the breakdown of the Bretton Woods system. The international community still needed to learn how to manage such economic turmoil. It would be useful to conduct an honest re-evaluation of the international policy response to assess its achievements and failures. He also noted that it was much more difficult to manage integration into international capital markets than it was to achieve successful insertion into the international trading system. Developing countries should not be pushed or pressured into premature financial liberalization, as this would deny them the option of protecting their economies from international financial instability and volatile speculative capital flows.

“12. The Deputy Director-General of the World Trade Organization, stated that the fiftieth anniversary of the multilateral trading system six weeks before had demonstrated the virtual consensus throughout every region on the validity of open trade and economic integration under the rule of law. More and more, the ground rules provided by the World Trade Organization reached across, into and around other issues and concerns – ranging from investment and competition policy, to environmental, development, health and social policies. The various challenges needed to be faced as constituting pieces of a larger policy that demanded broader and more integrated solutions. Developing countries were increasingly represented in the world’s trading system. This reflected the emergence of many of these countries as important trading powers in their own right. Perhaps most significant of all was the establishment of improved binding mechanisms for settling trade disputes. Even the smallest country could now look to the World Trade Organization in defence of its interests on the basis of shared and enforceable rules. Still, a variety of non-tariff measures continued to restrict exports from developing countries, and the fact that national and international product standards were difficult to meet led to reduced exports opportunities for least developed countries. Also, in the field of trade in services, much scope remained for further liberalization.

“13. In the ensuing exchange of the Council with the Managing Director of IMF, the President of the World Bank and the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, considerable attention was paid to the Asian crisis. It was noted, in this regard that, while inadequacies in domestic financial and monetary policies had played a major part in leading to the problems that countries faced in Asia and elsewhere, those problems would not have reached such proportions if lending institutions operating in the international markets had not taken excessive risks. Concern was also expressed about the recent weakness of the yen which posed a crisis within the crisis. This weakness could seriously jeopardize the ongoing recovery in some countries.

“14. With respect to preventing future crises, it was observed that the severity and the speed of the Asian crisis had highlighted the need for rapid global response capacity to prevent and deal with future crises. This would require the strengthening and adaptation of multilateral institutions and greater coherence in policy-making. An honest re-evaluation of the international policy response – without any preconceptions or prejudice – was also needed. Furthermore, constant vigilance by all countries over all socio-economic parameters had to be maintained. In particular, soundness of the banking system, avoidance of the unsustainable accumulation of short-term financing, and the transparent and accountable character of governance were seen as essential. Also, transparency in international lending and borrowing were crucially important in order to deal with excessive short-term and speculative capital flows and problems of corruption and debt management in the economy. More effective procedures for involving the private sector in preventing and resolving the debt crisis also needed to be established. In addition, in order to reap the benefits of globalization while minimizing its risks, developing countries should continue to liberalize trade and capital controls, paying due attention to sequencing and the soundness of the financial and balance-of-payments situation. At the same time, developing countries should not be pushed into premature financial liberalization. The fruitful dialogue on these issues at the special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, held on 18 April 1998, was widely noted and a call was made to hold similar meetings in the future.

“15. With regard to trade liberalization and market access, it was noted that they should also be seen in the context of poverty eradication, the ultimate goal of development efforts. In this context, ensuring the provision of basic services, creating adequate infrastructure and investing in human development were all necessary prerequisites of a developing country’s benefiting from any enhancement of global market access for its goods. It was also noted that numerous tariff – and non-tariff – barriers remained, as well as tariff peaks and escalation, which affected developing countries’ exports. Liberalization should continue in these and other trade areas. Furthermore, the international trading system could not be viewed in isolation from other developmental concerns, nor from other related issues. Therefore, the future multilateral trade agenda should aim at broad-based liberalization of trade.

“16. Concerning coherence of the United Nations system, it was stressed that cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system, between the United Nations and the international financial institutions, and between the United Nations and the World Trade Organization were crucial for preparing future trade negotiations and addressing other major challenges. At the same, it was noted that within the United Nations system, a substantial increase of dialogue and working together had already been achieved; the challenge was to build upon the progress made to achieve greater complementarity and coherence in the management of the global economy.

“III. High-level debate

“17. It was generally agreed that liberalized world trade was essential in promoting growth and development and in eradicating poverty.

“18. Full commitment to the multilateral trading system was expressed. The Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations had resulted in a more open, rule-based and predictable multilateral trading system and significant improvement in market access conditions. Full and faithful implementation of the Uruguay Round commitments, which was considered essential for the credibility of the multilateral trading system, was called for.

“19. Regret was expressed about the lack of progress in implementing the provisions on special and differential treatment for developing countries, and a strengthened commitment and concrete action to implement these provisions were urged. In this regard, it was recalled that trading partners must guarantee developing countries full market access, and industrialized countries should consider granting unilateral duty-free treatment to developing countries on a preferential basis. However, a number of developed countries did consider the integration of developing countries into the world trading system one of the primary objectives of their development policies, and therefore granted all developing countries, for almost all the exports of those countries, preferential access to their markets.

“20. It was pointed out that significant tariffs and other non-tariff barriers to market access remained important impediments in many sectors, a considerable number of which were of particular interest to developing countries and least developed countries. The view was expressed that the implementation of the Uruguay Round was incomplete in many key areas of particular interest to the developing countries. It was noted that there was little commercially meaningful integration of textiles and clothing into the multilateral trading system so far, and that subsidizing agriculture in developed countries impeded developing countries’ agricultural exports as well as their efforts to attain food security. On the other hand, it was recalled that the unprecedentedly large number of developing countries that actively participated in the multilateral trade liberalization had derived large benefits from it, including in terms of improved access to the markets of developed countries.

“21. The developing of a comprehensive agenda for further trade liberalization that reflected the interests of all members of the World Trade Organization was called for. It was noted that the launching of a millennium round of trade negotiations was crucial for meeting the challenges of a globalized economy and it was argued that negotiations to further liberalize agriculture and services should be placed in a broader negotiating framework that would allow for a balanced treatment of the interests of all members. Support was expressed for a multilateral framework of rules on investment and competition in the services sector and for mainstreaming sustainable development into the multilateral trade liberalization agenda.

“22. Reference was made to the agreement at the second Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization to establish a work programme in preparation for the next World Trade Organization ministerial meeting. The developing of a comprehensive agenda for further liberalization, which would reflect the interest of all members and would be able to deliver results in a short time, was called for. Also, all partners were invited to be proactive in setting out their priorities for a multilateral round of trade negotiations.

“23. Measures taken by members of the World Trade Organization that were in contravention of the spirit of the multilateral trade agreements, such as contingency measures (for example, transitional safeguard measures, unilateral rules of origin and back-loading in the implementation of the agreement on textile and clothing), were deplored. Developed importing countries were called upon to faithfully work towards integrating fully the textile and clothing sector into the system. The abuse of anti-dumping measures and the use of discriminatory trade actions were among the actions to be rejected. Some delegations stressed that the taking of unilateral measures as well as the enactment of national laws with extraterritorial effects should be totally excluded as an option of trade policy in regard to the multilateral trading system.

“24. The mandatory reviews of various agreements, such as the Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, including Trade in Counterfeit Goods, the Agreement on Trade-Related Investment Measures and, especially, the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing Settlement of Disputes,² were seen as being of considerable importance as well. In this regard, it was pointed out that the Disputes Settlement Understanding should, inter alia, include greater technical and legal support to developing countries in order to make the World Trade Organization judicial enforcement mechanism more accessible to those countries.

“25. The lack of technical abilities of the developing countries was seen as a major constraint on their efforts to take fuller advantage of the multilateral trade agreements. The importance of the provision of the necessary technical assistance to developing countries was underlined. Many delegations referred to their ongoing support to developing countries in this regard, as well as to the preferential market access granted by them to these countries.

“26. However, it was noted that securing market access did not by itself guarantee actual export revenues. Competitiveness was based not only on quality and price of products but also on such interrelated factors as good production practices and export financing. Furthermore, comparative advantages were seen as being time-bound and did not guarantee success in the long run.

“27. One delegation pointed out that, while promoting and increasing exports were universally accepted as a means to create wealth, the importance of imports was not often accorded similar treatment. His country, which provided liberal market access, was providing jobs at home and around the globe.

“28. Sound macroeconomic policies and a legal and economic framework that enhanced the growth of a dynamic private sector were seen as essential in improving countries’ capacity to trade. Equally important were an enabling environment for investment, good governance, sound competition policy, fostering of human resources in the areas of trade, trade support services, strengthened public institutions focusing on trade, and trade-related infrastructural development.

“29. The view was expressed that a multilateral framework of rules on investment and competition in the service sector should, in particular, provide a stimulant to foreign direct investment. The importance of examining trade issues related to electronic commerce was also emphasized.

“30. Integration of the least developed countries in the global trading system was a priority for all. A number of measures to improve their market access conditions and supply capacity were suggested, such as full and effective implementation of the Plan of Action for the least developed countries adopted at the first Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization,³ as well as the Integrated Framework for Trade-Related Technical Assistance, Including for Human and Institutional Capacity-building, to Support Least Developed Countries in Their Trade and Trade-related Activities,³ adopted at the High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for Least Developed Countries' Trade Development held in October 1997; provision of duty-free access to all products and removal of all quantitative import restrictions for least developed countries; elimination of tariff escalation; and elimination of time-based elements in the special and preferential treatment granted to least developed countries in multilateral trade agreements.

"31. Recent preferential actions in favour of least developed countries, including through improvements in generalized system of preference (GSP) schemes, were recounted. It was pointed out that least developed countries themselves needed to continue efforts towards creating a sound macroeconomic framework, including transparent and accountable governance, investment in basic social services and openness to trade and investment.

"32. Commitments to assist least developed countries and African countries were reiterated and bilateral initiatives in favour of these countries were brought to the attention of the Council, and the international community was called upon to continue its effort to enhance market access for products of export interest to Africa and to support Africa's efforts towards diversification and building supply capacity. South-South cooperation in trade and other areas should also be supported.

"33. The importance of official development assistance (ODA) was also noted. It was pointed out that ODA ensures external financial flows to countries that have difficulties in mobilizing domestic resources and in attracting foreign direct investment. ODA-financed development in sectors not reached by private flows, and the 0.7 per cent target have lost none of their importance.

"34. It was underscored that trade policy had an important role to play in restoring stability and growth in countries affected by the crisis in Asia. Rejection of protectionist measures and a clear commitment to pursue further comprehensive trade and investment liberalization were essential in this respect. The crisis had shown the importance of promoting greater coherence between trade and macroeconomic, social and other policies. In this respect, the United Nations could play an important role in promoting greater awareness of these interactions and developing international norms. Enhanced cooperation between the World Trade Organization and the Bretton Woods institutions was crucial, as was greater cooperation between the United Nations and the World Trade Organization. The World Trade Organization was called upon to reflect on how to better effect a coherence between its activities and the broader needs and concerns of the global economy.

"35. The need for promoting the principle of universality in the multilateral trading system, within the framework of the World Trade Organization, was emphasized. Early completion of the accession process was also called for. Many of the countries negotiating entry into the World Trade Organization expected the next round of negotiations to be open for participation of interested countries irrespective of their application for entry into the World Trade Organization. In this regard, it was noted that countries acceding to the World Trade Organization should not be asked for commitments higher than those made by countries that had joined the organization earlier. Early completion of the pending processes for accession was called for.

"36. At the same time, it was stressed that regional trading arrangements could make an important contribution to a solid and universal multilateral trading system. Such arrangements could help developing countries achieve integration into the world trading system as they had helped them develop and diversify their market bases. However, these arrangements should be fully consistent with the rules and principles of the international trading system and should maintain the basic tenet of open regionalism. The experience gained through such arrangements could benefit the multilateral trading system.

“37. Arguments in favour of making environment and trade policies mutually supportive were also put forward. Reference was made to a recent proposal that the World Trade Organization should convene a high-level meeting on trade and the environment to help overcome the current impasse in discussion and promote the concept of sustainable development in the World Trade Organization agenda.

“38. The adoption by the International Labour Organization (ILO) of a Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work was welcomed and proposals for a practical follow-up mechanism within ILO were eagerly awaited. To pursue enhanced social and environmental protection through positive incentives, a number of developed countries had recently started providing, through their GSP scheme, additional preferences to those developing countries that had adopted and implemented internationally agreed environmental and social norms.

“39. It was also noted that trade conditionalities to enforce non-trading objectives, including those related to labour standards and the environment, could undermine the proper functioning of the multilateral trading system.

“40. One delegation referred to the economic blockade of its country by a developed country, which ignored the successive resolutions of the General Assembly condemning that blockade, and called for its total and unconditional elimination.

“41. A few other delegations noted the importance of emphasizing the danger of an excessive recourse to the imposing of economic sanctions on developing countries. Two delegations condemned the automatic renewal by the Security Council of economic sanctions against their countries despite the General Assembly’s calls to put an end to the punitive and unilateral economic measures. It was pointed out by one delegation that the Assembly had not adopted those resolutions by consensus.

“42. One delegation raised the issue of the banana trade and expressed discontent with the World Trade Organization ruling that preferential treatment of African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries contravened the World Trade Organization’s principles. The delegate warned that the implementation of the ruling would bring about a reduction in the living standards of the people of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) and an acceleration of poverty. A fundamental reform of the dispute settlement was needed. In a right of reply, one delegation stated that trade dispute settlements based on rules would always lead to situations in which countries won some rulings but lost others.

“43. Finally, a view was expressed that the United Nations system as a whole, particularly UNCTAD, should continue to play an active role in helping developing countries through, inter alia:

“(a) Ensuring a continuum in its work programme between research activities and its capacity-building and technical cooperation functions;

“(b) Providing objective and in-depth analyses of the effects of liberalization and of any proposals for further liberalization;

“(c) Strengthening the capacity of developing countries to participate in trade negotiations;

“(d) Continuing to devote a large part of its work to building and enhancing capacity to trade in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and those in Africa, and substantially increasing its trade-related technical cooperation;

“(e) Strengthening its information and training services, and strengthening technical cooperation to expand export supply capabilities of developing countries;

“(f) Promoting better coherence among global development, financial and trade policies so that the ability of the developing countries to benefit from increasing trade was not compromised by imperfections in financial markets;

“(g) Ensuring that the structural factors such as debt, inadequate concessional development finance and restrictions on the transfer of technology did not impede the developing countries in respect of their availing themselves of the opportunities presented by the multilateral trading system.

“44. In conclusion, many delegations commended UNCTAD and the World Trade Organization for their excellent joint documentation in preparation for the high-level segment and for their support towards its successful outcome.”

1. At its substantive session, the Council held a discussion on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (agenda item 4) at its 32nd, 33rd, 36th to 38th and 47th meetings on 17, 21, 22 and 31 July 1998. The Council had before it the report of the Secretary-General on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (E/1998/60).

3. At the same meeting, the Council adopted the draft agreed conclusions, as orally corrected. The text read as follows:

Agreed conclusions 1998/2

“The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action¹ affirms that the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms must be considered as a priority objective of the United Nations in accordance with its purposes and principles, in particular the purpose of international cooperation. In the framework of these purposes and principles, the promotion and protection of all human rights is a legitimate concern of the international community. The organs and specialized agencies related to human rights should further enhance the coordination of their activities based on the consistent and objective application of international human rights instruments.

“All human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated. The international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis. While the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

“Taking place after the initial discussion on the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action during the fifty-fourth session of the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council portion of the five-year review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action is of particular importance to the ongoing efforts of the United Nations to increase system-wide coordinated follow-up to, and implementation of, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. It will be followed, during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, by the overall evaluation of the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights at Vienna.

“The Economic and Social Council reaffirms the important role of non-governmental organizations in the promotion of all human rights and in humanitarian activities at the national, regional and international levels. The Council appreciates their contribution to increasing public awareness of human rights issues, to the conduct of education, training and research in this field, and to the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

“I. Increased system-wide coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action

“1. The Economic and Social Council reaffirms the need for increased coordination in support of human rights and fundamental freedoms within the United Nations system. To this end, all United Nations organs, bodies and specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights shall cooperate in order to strengthen, rationalize and streamline their activities, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication. The Council, reaffirming the United Nations system-wide approach to human rights, welcomes the fact that human rights are increasingly being promoted throughout the United Nations system. The Council calls on all components of the United Nations system to continue their efforts to increase system-wide coordination and inter-agency cooperation to promote all human rights, including gender-related aspects, in their activities. The Council reaffirms the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for coordinating human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system and supports her efforts to promote intra-system cooperation and coordination in this area, leading to a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights based on the contribution of each of the United Nations organs, bodies and specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights and on improved inter-agency cooperation and coordination. The Council calls upon United Nations departments, funds, programmes and specialized agencies, within their respective mandates, to participate actively in this process.

“2. Inter-agency consultations at the working level organized by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with the support of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to prepare the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the five-year review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, should continue in the future as a forum for cooperation, covering various aspects of United Nations human rights activities.

“3. The Council recommends that the interrelationship and interdependence of democracy, development and respect for all human rights guide the United Nations Secretariat and other parts of the United Nations system when formulating policies or implementing programmes and activities in various areas, recognizing that consideration of economic, social and humanitarian issues would benefit from a perspective that takes fully into account all human rights.

“4. The Council calls upon its functional commissions, as well as the regional commissions and other organs, bodies and specialized agencies, within their respective mandates, to take all human rights fully into account in their respective activities.

“5. The Council emphasizes the need for a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights based on effective coordination of efforts by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies. The Council reiterates the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action call for the high-level officials of United Nations bodies and agencies, at their annual meeting, not only to coordinate their activities but also to assess the impact of their strategies and policies on the enjoyment of all human rights.

“6. The Council reaffirms the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues.

“7. The Council recommends that all components of the United Nations system active in the field coordinate, within their respective mandates, their projects in human rights and related areas. They should draw on the expertise of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

“8. The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue and strengthen his efforts to recruit staff for the Secretariat, including staff for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with the paramount consideration being the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and with due regard to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible, bearing in mind that the principle of equitable geographical distribution is compatible with the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, as affirmed by the Commission on Human Rights in its report to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council.² The Council also stresses the need for the consideration of gender balance for the recruitment of staff at all levels. The Council invites States parties to the human rights treaties to give due consideration to equitable geographical representation and gender balance when nominating and electing members of the human rights treaty bodies.

“9. The Council expresses its support for the system-wide human rights training of United Nations staff to increase and improve cross-sectoral knowledge and thus contribute to human rights awareness-building. Components of the United Nations system are encouraged to cooperate closely in this regard with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

“10. The Council recognizes the necessity for the continuing adaptation of the United Nations human rights machinery to the current and future needs in the promotion and protection of human rights as reflected in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. The Council reaffirms the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights that the States parties to international human rights instruments, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should consider studying the existing human rights treaty bodies and the various thematic mechanisms and procedures, with a view to promoting greater efficiency and effectiveness through better coordination of the various bodies, mechanisms and procedures, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication and overlapping of their mandates and tasks. The Council takes note of the ongoing efforts of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within their respective mandates, in this regard.

“11. The Council recognizes the need for increased regular budget resources for the expanded activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner, in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/83.³ In this regard, the Council reiterates the request of the General Assembly to the Secretary-General, as contained in Assembly resolution 48/141, to provide appropriate staff and resources from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations, to enable the High Commissioner to fulfil her mandate, without diverting resources from the development programmes and activities of the United Nations.

“II. Democracy – development – human rights and the right to development and the role of international cooperation

“1. The Economic and Social Council calls for consistent affirmation throughout the United Nations system of the interrelationship and interdependence between democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms. The relationship between democracy, development and human rights should be taken fully into account in the policies and programmes of the United Nations system. The international community should support the strengthening and promotion of democracy, development and respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the entire world. The Council reaffirms that the right to development as a universal and inalienable right is an integral part of fundamental human rights. As stated in the Declaration on the Right to Development,⁴ the human person is the central subject of development. “2. The Council urges the relevant components of the United Nations system to take further steps for the realization of the right to development and recalls the need for coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system for more effective promotion and realization of the right to development. The Council invites the Bretton Woods institutions and regional financial institutions to increase their participation in this process.

“3. The Council calls upon the United Nations system to increase its efforts to eradicate poverty in the framework of its overall efforts to promote all human rights. The Council calls for continuing focus of the United Nations system on implementing its agreed conclusions on system-wide efforts for the eradication of poverty,⁵ with particular emphasis on extreme poverty, bearing in mind that anti-poverty strategies contribute to the enjoyment of all human rights. 5. At the same meeting, the Council adopted the draft agreed conclusions as set out below.

Agreed conclusions 1998/1

“1. The Economic and Social Council is addressing the theme of ‘Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian activities of the United Nations system’ in its first humanitarian segment. Previous relevant resolutions, in particular General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and its annex, including the guiding principles contained therein, provide the basis of this discussion.

“2. The Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations (A/53/139-E/1998/67). It welcomes progress made in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, and wishes to give guidance for further developments in this direction.

“3. The Council reiterates the need for coordinated humanitarian assistance and adequate financial resources to ensure an ongoing capacity for a prompt, timely and effective response by the United Nations system to natural disasters and other emergencies, both for immediate relief and for the smooth transition between relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and long-term development, which are not necessarily sequential and often proceed at the same time.

“4. The Council reaffirms that humanitarian operations are generally implemented through close cooperation among Governments and the United Nations, its agencies, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations. Each State has the responsibility first and foremost to take care of the victims of natural disasters and other emergencies occurring on its territory. Hence, the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory. The magnitude and duration of many emergencies may be beyond the response capacity of many affected countries. International cooperation to address emergency situations and strengthen the response capacity of affected countries is thus of great importance. Such cooperation should be provided in accordance with international law and national laws. Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations working impartially and with strictly humanitarian motives should continue to make a significant contribution in supplementing national efforts.

“5. The Council is concerned by the growing number of natural disasters and environmental emergencies which often strike countries that lack the resources to cope with them adequately.

“6. The Council affirms its support for the principles and norms of international humanitarian law, and stresses the urgent need to ensure respect for and promotion of these principles and norms. The Council is also concerned by the increasingly difficult context in which humanitarian assistance in some areas takes place, in particular the continuous erosion, in many cases, of the respect for international humanitarian law and principles, through deliberate violence both against civilians, particularly women and children, and aid workers. The Council welcomes the continued efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to prevent the targeting of women and children in conflict situations, stop the recruitment and use of children as soldiers in hostilities in violation of international law, and support the demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers. The Council notes the importance of engaging a much wider segment of civil society in raising awareness for humanitarian issues and respect for international humanitarian law and principles, and in supporting humanitarian programmes.

“7. The Council reaffirms General Assembly resolution 52/167 of 16 December 1997 on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, in which the Assembly calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in countries where humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons. The Council also reaffirms the necessity for all humanitarian personnel to respect the national laws of the countries in which they are operating.

“8. The Emergency Relief Coordinator, in cooperation with the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Secretariat, should ensure that a gender perspective is fully integrated into humanitarian activities and policies.

“9. The Council welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, in particular through the creation of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, with its three core functions of policy development and coordination, advocacy of humanitarian issues and coordination of humanitarian emergency response, as well as the guiding objectives of the Office in implementing the reforms. It fully supports the leadership role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator for the ongoing coordination of humanitarian assistance activities and prioritization of programmes within United Nations Consolidated Appeals. The Council notes that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs is responsible for sharing all relevant information with the United Nations Mine Action Service, the focal point within the United Nations system for all mine-related activities, and other partners on the humanitarian implications of landmines, and will work to ensure that humanitarian needs are met as an integral component of the overall humanitarian endeavour.

“10. The Council commends the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) under the leadership of the Emergency Relief Coordinator as the primary mechanism for inter-agency coordination for its efforts to achieve coherent coordination structures at the field level and to promote, at the inter-agency level, a clear division of responsibilities and ensure accountability, as well as for improving the reporting modalities by the funds and programmes on their humanitarian assistance activities. The Council welcomes the use of inter-agency negotiating teams led by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, to advocate the respect of humanitarian principles in the field and the development of contingency planning.

“11. The Council notes with satisfaction the designation of the Emergency Relief Coordinator as the focal point for inter-agency coordination of humanitarian assistance to internally displaced persons (IDPs), and also notes the adoption by IASC of the guiding principles on IDPs, and encourages the Emergency Relief Coordinator, in fulfilling this function, to work closely with all agencies and organizations involved, in particular with the Representative of the Secretary-General on IDPs, who will report to the Commission of Human Rights on his efforts and on the views expressed to him on these guiding principles.

“12. The Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that the resident coordinator should normally coordinate the humanitarian assistance activities of the United Nations by assuming the dual function of resident/humanitarian coordinator. Other mechanisms, namely the appointment of a humanitarian coordinator distinct from the resident coordinator and the designation of a lead agency as well as the appointment of a regional coordinator, might be justified under appropriate circumstances. The Council fully supports enhanced efforts to clarify the parameters of authority for the resident/humanitarian coordinator functions, the establishment of selection criteria and procedures, and specific training and performance review mechanisms for humanitarian coordinators, and encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and IASC to pursue these goals vigorously. The Council encourages all United Nations funds and programmes to cooperate fully in developing and maintaining a roster of qualified candidates.

“13. The Council calls upon the Secretary-General to develop emergency rules and procedures to ensure a rapid response to humanitarian crises, as requested in General Assembly resolution 46/182.

“14. The Council welcomes the emphasis in the report of the Secretary-General on the issues of natural disasters and environmental emergencies, and reaffirms the importance it attaches to this aspect of the Emergency Relief Coordinator’s mandate. The Council reaffirms that disaster reduction forms an integral part of the sustainable development strategies and national development plans of vulnerable countries and communities. The Council stresses that disaster preparedness and early warning must be further strengthened at country and regional levels, inter alia, through better coordination among relevant United Nations bodies and cooperation with interested Governments, regional organizations and other relevant sectors, in order to maximize the effectiveness of natural disaster response, in particular in developing countries. Particular efforts should be undertaken to enhance local capacity in disaster response, as well as to utilize capacities already existing in developing countries which may be available closer to the site of a disaster and at lower cost. The Council commends the work of the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) teams in providing rapid need assessments and facilitating the coordination of disaster response. The Council takes note that a review of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR) will take place at the substantive session of 1999 of the Council.

“15. The Council commends the Emergency Relief Coordinator for his efforts in implementing General Assembly resolution 52/200 entitled ‘International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon’ and invites the United Nations Inter-agency Task Force on El Niño to provide its experiences on national capacity programmes for disaster management as an input to the development of the disaster reduction strategy for the twenty-first century.

“16. The Council recognizes the contributions made by donor Governments to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance and notes that the un earmarked contributions to the reserve of this Trust Fund could usefully be increased, and therefore strongly encourages further contributions to this reserve.

“17. The Council recognizes that the phases of relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development are generally not consecutive but often overlap and occur simultaneously. It also recognizes that a ‘relief/development gap’ may occur in countries emerging from crisis which may be addressed, inter alia, through a strategic framework, to be developed in consultation with Governments. The Council notes the need to develop, through a strategic framework, when appropriate, a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, in which key aspects of durable recovery, peace-building, all human rights, sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and recent United Nations conferences, are included. The development of such a comprehensive approach must involve national authorities as well as the United Nations system, donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. National authorities must take a leading role in all aspects of the recovery plan. In this context, the Council welcomes the recognition by the World Bank of the need for its entry into an early dialogue with humanitarian agencies and to participate from the outset in effective coordination mechanisms in relation to countries emerging from crisis. The Council stresses that strengthening capacities to enable societies in post-conflict situations to manage their own affairs is a critical factor for recovery and development. In this context, the roles and responsibilities of Governments are important.

“18. The Council underlines that the consolidated appeal process (CAP) remains the principal resource mobilization tool for humanitarian assistance. The Council stresses the importance of ensuring adequate funding for humanitarian activities, in particular of consolidated appeals. It welcomes efforts to prioritize needs and to enhance capabilities so as to better take into account linkages with development-oriented activities which should continue to be intensified. It underlines that the consolidated appeals process should be carried out in full collaboration with United Nations bodies and other relevant humanitarian organizations, international financial institutions, donors and host Governments as an important step towards a more integrated and strategic approach. It stresses that contributions to humanitarian assistance should not be provided at the expense of development assistance. The Council encourages the efforts to improve the format and structure of the CAP so as to make them effective programming instruments for the purpose of strategic planning. The Council further stresses that strengthened United Nations humanitarian activities must be supported by adequate responses to all United Nations humanitarian appeals. Broadening the base of the donors may contribute to an increased response to appeals. The Council stresses that the response to international appeals should not be overly influenced by the levels of media interest, and must be commensurate with the needs of the affected population.

“19. The Council invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, for its consideration, his proposals for putting the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs on a sound financial basis for the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities.

“20. The Council stresses the importance of ensuring an overall accountability of humanitarian actors. It supports the development by IASC of a field-based system for strategic monitoring which will help assess how programme targets and strategic objectives are being met.

“21. The Council affirms the importance of discussion of policies and activities in the humanitarian area in the Council and the General Assembly. The Council requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments, to recommend, at its organizational session, ways in which the humanitarian segment may be enhanced so as to strengthen the role of the Council as regards the coordination and policy guidance of United Nations system humanitarian activities, taking fully into account the outcome and views expressed by Member States during the substantive session of 1998 of the Council.

“22. The Council requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its next humanitarian segment on the implementation of/follow-up to these agreed conclusions.”
