African Union

4. The Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council held their seventh and eighth annual consultative meetings in 2013 and 2014. The United Nations-African Union Joint Task Force on Peace and Security continues to meet twice a year, contributing to the efforts of both organizations to develop a common understanding of the causes and drivers of conflict in Africa and to promote joint approaches to resolving those conflicts.

5. During the past two years, the African Union, supported by the United Nations, deployed two new peace support operations: the African-led International Support Mission in Mali and the African-led International Support Mission in the Central African Republic. The United Nations Office to the African Union provides critical support for the planning and management of the start-up, deployment and operation of those missions, as well as to ensure more effective communication between the African Union and the United Nations in preparing for the eventual handover of those missions to the United Nations. The Office has placed additional emphasis on making its collaboration with the African Union more systematic and sustained through all stages of the conflict cycle. This includes a renewed focus on strengthening the partnership between the United Nations and the African Union in the areas of early warning, conflict prevention and mediation, including through enhanced exchange of information and joint analysis, and systematic engagement with a view to coordinated, timely and effective action based on the principles of added value and complementarity. The Office has also continued to provide support to the African Union in the operationalization of the Continental Structural Conflict Prevention Framework and has enhanced its engagement on the Continental Early Warning System. The United Nations continues to provide electoral advice and support to the African Union Democracy and Electoral Assistance Unit through the Office.

6. The United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa, which is the focal point for United Nations efforts in the fight against the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), has worked closely with the African Union towards the implementation of the United Nations regional strategy on LRA and has supported the Union's Regional Cooperation Initiative against LRA.

7. In November 2013, the United Nations, the African Union, the European Union, the World Bank and the African Development Bank undertook their first joint visit to the Sahel, a first step towards the provision of more effective and targeted support to the region. On the margins of the joint visit, ministers from the Sahel, West Africa and the Maghreb regions agreed to establish a regional mechanism to enhance coordination, mobilize resources and prioritize regional initiatives. The mechanism is supported by a technical secretariat co-chaired by the African Union and the United Nations.

8. In Somalia, the United Nations Office to the African Union helped to enhance the ability of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) to address the situation. The Department of Field Support delivers the logistic support package to AMISOM through the United Nations Support Office for the African Union Mission in Somalia. With the establishment of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Somalia in June 2013, cooperation with AMISOM on the ground has been strengthened at the strategic and operational levels.

9. The Special Envoy for the Sudan and South Sudan provided technical and advisory support to the African Union High-level Implementation Panel with regard to the negotiations between the Governments of the Sudan and South Sudan, which led to the signing of agreements on 27 September 2012 and the subsequent operationalization of the Joint Border Verification and Monitoring Mechanism on 16 June 2014.

IV. Observations and recommendations

142. As the present report illustrates, cooperation between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations now touches virtually every area of the Organization’s mandate, from peace and security and human rights to economic and social affairs, development and humanitarian assistance. The United Nations should continue to strengthen its partnership with regional and subregional actors as a means to implement the Organization’s mandates and the overall objectives enshrined in the Charter.

143. This report also shows that regional and subregional organizations are highly diverse, with distinct approaches, structures, priorities, thematic areas of work and expertise. A one-size-fits-all approach to such cooperation would not be conducive to success. In this regard, the United Nations should continue to develop context-specific approaches to cooperation with its regional and subregional partners, taking into account the specificities of each region, the mandate and objectives of the institution concerned and the overall interests of Member States.

144. As varied as United Nations cooperation with regional actors may be, a common principle across all of the partnerships described in the present report is the recognition that more interaction and coordination are beneficial for the international community at large. This has translated into more cooperation agreements, high-level contacts, staff exchanges, joint training, common publications and, more broadly, strategic coordination across a breadth of mandates. The United Nations and regional and subregional actors should continue to explore ways in which their cooperation can be better articulated at the strategic and technical levels.

145. The Secretary-General remains committed to further strengthening this cooperation in the future, taking into account the different needs and demands of each partnership.
