Updated inventory chart of General Assembly resolutions on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly, issued pursuant to resolution 75/325	24

I. Introduction

1. By its resolution 75/325, the General Assembly decided to establish, at its seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh sessions, an ad hoc working group on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly, open to all Member States:

(a) To identify further ways to enhance the role, authority, effectiveness and efficiency of the Assembly, inter alia, by building on progress achieved in past sessions as well as on previous resolutions, including evaluating the status of their implementation, with the primary focus on:

(i) During the seventy-sixth session: role and authority of the General Assembly, and working methods;

(ii) During the seventy-seventh session: strengthening the accountability, transparency and institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly and selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads.

2. The General Assembly further decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group should continue its review of the inventory of Assembly resolutions on revitalization annexed to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group submitted at the seventy-fifth session (A/75/973) and, as a result, continue to update the inventory to be attached to the reports to be submitted at the seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh sessions of the Assembly, including the separate indication of relevant provisions that were not implemented, with reasons therefor. The present report is submitted pursuant to the provisions of that resolution.

3. During the seventy-seventh session of the General Assembly, the President of the General Assembly appointed the Permanent Representative of Australia to the United Nations, Mitchell Fifield, and the Permanent Representative of El Salvador to the United Nations, Egriselda González López, as Co-Chairs of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

II. Proceedings

4. The Working Group held a total of three formal meetings, on 9 February, 15 March and 7 July 2023.

5. The programme of work consisted of two thematic meetings on the following themes:

(a) Selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads;

(b) Strengthening the accountability, transparency and institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly.

6. In addition, one meeting was held on 7 June 2023 as part of the interactive dialogue between permanent missions and the Secretariat. All formal meetings and the dialogue between permanent missions and the Secretariat were webcast.

A. Thematic debate on the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads

7. The Co-Chairs convened a thematic debate on the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads on 9 February 2023. In their opening statements, the Co-Chairs highlighted the importance for the General Assembly, as the chief policy and deliberative organ of the United Nations, of examining innovative ways to enhance and improve the process of selecting and appointing the Secretary-General and other executive heads of the United Nations system. They also encouraged members to discuss the implementation of relevant mandates associated with the third pillar of the revitalization process, as well as to elaborate new proposals for inclusion in the resolution of the seventy-seventh session.

8. As requested in paragraph 69 of resolution 75/325, a briefing was provided by the Director of the Global Strategy and Policy Division of the Office of Human Resources of the Department of Management Strategy, Policy and Compliance on the gender and geographical distribution of the executive heads of the United Nations system and the Senior Management Group. A document containing information on geographical diversity and gender parity was circulated to delegations on the same day. In his presentation, the Director noted some progress in the number of Member States within the desirable range. An increase in the number of unrepresented and overrepresented Member States was observed during the same period. He noted two main challenges faced in attaining equitable geographical distribution, namely the supply of applicants from unrepresented and underrepresented Member States, and the systemic and structural shortcomings of the staff selection system, which would require the rectification of policies, processes and technology. The Director also provided an update on gender parity. In January 2023, women staff members composed 44 per cent of the Secretariat and 33 per cent of the field. In the field, while gender parity among resident coordinators was reached in 2019, and among senior management in 2021, the pace of change in lower grades was slower.

9. In an interactive segment, 11 delegations and the Co-Chairs posed questions and sought clarification on several issues. Several delegations enquired about measures taken by the Secretariat to address the two main challenges faced in attaining equitable geographical distribution. Some delegations asked for clarification of the difference between talent pools and rosters and noted the lack of transparency regarding the recruitment process through those methods. One delegate highlighted the fact that no female candidate had been appointed as Secretary-General and enquired about efforts made to address that. The Co-Chair and a few other delegations raised the issue of diversity representation among staff, in particular for persons with disabilities and Indigenous Peoples. Several Member States advocated the increased participation of young people in the Secretariat, identification of the barriers preventing youth from opportunities and expansion of the ways for young professionals, especially those from developing countries, to enter the system. In response, the Director outlined the efforts made by the Secretariat to focus on diversity, multilingualism, disability inclusion and youth in its selection processes. While highlighting the progress that the Secretariat had made in making its selection process more transparent and timely, he acknowledged that it would require much more time to overhaul the decades-old decision-making practices in place. He underlined the importance of outreach and partnership initiatives towards regional groups to dispel existing myths about the recruitment process of the United Nations and to reach talents in areas where there were gaps.

10. In the subsequent debate, 23 delegations made statements, including on behalf of four groups, focused on the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General and other executive heads, and the geographical and gender-balanced representation in the Secretariat. Delegations underlined the central role of the General Assembly, as the main and deliberative policy-making body of the Organization, in the process of selecting and appointing the Secretary-General, and expressed their support for efforts aimed at reinforcing and strengthening the role of the Assembly in that regard. Several delegations indicated that the process should be well structured, with sufficient time for preparation and considerations, and for the process to be concluded well before the beginning of the next mandate. Most speakers noted that, as recognized in paragraph 68 of resolution 75/325, a woman Secretary-General had yet to be appointed, and reiterated the invitation to Member States to bear that in mind in the future, when nominating candidates for the position of Secretary-General. One group called upon the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Security Council to reinforce that call in future processes.

11. Delegations reiterated the need to provide the process of selection and appointment of the Secretary-General with clear, transparent and sufficient timelines, including for the publishing of the joint letter by the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Security Council containing the submission of candidatures; for a deadline for the submission of candidatures; for the completion of Assembly hearings with all candidates; and for the Council recommendation and the resolution from the Assembly regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General. Some groups welcomed the recommendation in resolution 75/325 encouraging Member States to publicize the call for nominations, including with civil society and other stakeholders with the aim of identifying potential candidates. It was proposed that candidates voluntarily disclose funding resources relating to their candidacy to add transparency to the process. Speakers called upon the President of the General Assembly to continue to hold informal dialogues between candidates and Member States, and to further improve the dialogues by making them more interactive in terms of time allotted to candidates to reply and for civil society and other stakeholders to ask questions. Some acknowledged that the selection process benefited from the increasing role of civil society, and encouraged its representatives to continue to provide important contributions to improving the selection process.

12. One group called for thorough discussions on the following improvements to the selection process: that the Secretary-General, upon recommendation of the Security Council, be appointed through secret ballot in the General Assembly; that the Council be encouraged to submit more than one name for the consideration of the Assembly; and that a single, longer and non-renewable term for future Secretaries-General be established. That call was echoed by other speakers. A few speakers called for transparency from the Council during the selection and appointment process of the Secretary-General, inviting the President of the Security Council to promote a more inclusive and transparent selection process.

13. With regard to the selection and appointment of the executive heads of the United Nations system and the Senior Management Group of the Organization, delegations underlined the importance of maintaining the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and the need for equal and fair distribution in terms of gender, linguistic and geographical balance. Speakers called for due regard to continue to be given to regional and geographical rotation and to gender equality, as stipulated in past resolutions, to address persisting historical imbalances, including the underrepresentation of developing countries in leadership positions. One group and several delegations shared the view that the Secretary-General should exercise full independence in the selection of senior officials while ensuring the transparency of a merit-based selection process and geographical and gender balance. They added that the practice of reserving certain senior appointments for nationals of particular Member States should be discontinued in line with resolution 46/232. In addition, one group proposed making an open call for nominations to a given position to supplement any search and consultation processes carried out by the Secretariat, as well as conducting interactive meetings with candidates running for those posts. The group called for greater consultations with Member States to ensure both consensus outcomes and the appointment of the best suitable candidates to senior management positions.

B. Thematic debate on strengthening the accountability, transparency and institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly

14. The Co-Chairs convened a thematic debate on strengthening the accountability, transparency and institutional memory of the Office of the President of the General Assembly on 15 March 2023. The President of the General Assembly delivered opening remarks, followed by the Under-Secretary-General for General Assembly and Conference Management who gave a briefing on the functioning of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, including recommendations for consideration by Member States, in follow-up to the report of the Task Force convened by the Secretary-General in November 2015, as mandated in paragraph 78 of resolution 75/325. The written update with recommendations requested on the same paragraph was circulated to Member States on 3 March 2023.

15. In his opening remarks, the President of the General Assembly spoke about the functioning of and challenges faced by his Office. He shared his observation that the setting of the agenda of the Assembly was a repetitive and routine exercise without long-term planning. He highlighted the limitations on the scope of what the President could accomplish during his or her one-year term, as most of the programme and mandates of the President for the session were determined before he or she took office. He added that the current system did not incentivize providing strategic continuity and institutional memory between presidencies. With regard to the funding of operations and expenditures, the President shared that 15 per cent of the expenses of the operations of his Office were funded by the regular budget, while 85 per cent came from the trust fund in support of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, which relied on voluntary contributions from a handful of Member States. He shared that about $2 million was needed during one term and that the President relied on funding from his or her respective country or on contributions from other Member States. The President took the opportunity to express concerns about how certain services, such as the use of a teleprompter or the convening of a press stakeout, were provided by service providers in a monopolistic position and came with a prohibitive price.

16. With regard to the process of selecting the President of the General Assembly, the President proposed: having a vacancy announcement for the post with concrete criteria while preserving regional rotation; encouraging Member States to put forward more women candidates; and considering a mandatory suspension of all other positions held by the candidate, once elected. With regard to the timing and tenure of the Presidency, the President encouraged Member States to consider the possibility of re-election or biennial terms to enable Presidents to see their mandates and processes through. Regarding the mission and priorities of the President of the General Assembly, he underlined the importance of close cooperation between incumbent Presidents and Presidents-elect and their teams. He added that early consultations between the President-elect and the Executive Office of the Secretary-General, starting no later than the day of the election, as well as regular consultations with Member States, were necessary for priorities to be shaped accordingly. With regard to staffing the Office of the President of the General Assembly, he shared that one third of the staff serving in his office had served under previous presidencies. He underlined that having the highest possible number of United Nations staff members and seconded personnel serve in consecutive terms would result in better transparency, institutional memory and institutional culture in the Office. He suggested establishing an upper limit in the number of staff and avoiding the proliferation of high-level jobs. In closing, the President highlighted some achievements: the practice of frequent consultations with former and incoming Presidents of the General Assembly and their teams; and the creation of informal platforms for interactions with Member States, such as the organizing of civil society forums the opening of informal meetings of the General Committee to all Member States, as well as the creation of an online oversight platform to keep track of ongoing mandates.

17. In response to the statement by the President of the General Assembly, the Co-Chair expressed his disappointment regarding the circumstances under which the President and his office had to operate, citing the example of the President having to pay to use the teleprompter in the General Assembly Hall or to do press stakeouts, and quipping that free speech was, in fact, not free. He added that the situation was emblematic of a bigger problem: the President and Member States, whom the United Nations comprised, were treated as tenants in the building. He welcomed the statement of the President as being timely and useful in the deliberation on how to revitalize the Assembly, and emphasized that the support to the Office of the General Assembly was key to its fulfilling its functions.

18. The Under-Secretary-General for General Assembly and Conference Management gave a briefing on the support provided by the Secretariat for the functioning of the Office of the President of the General Assembly, specifically the sources of the funding and staffing of the Office. With regard to staffing, the Under-Secretary-General stated that the regular budgetary resources in support of the Office of the President of the General Assembly comprised staff recruited under the authority of the President and staff seconded from other departments and offices and agencies, funds and programmes. That was complemented by advisers and experts in their respective fields, seconded by their governments in their capacity as gratis personnel, as well as external consultants, to provide expertise not available within the Secretariat. The Department for General Assembly and Conference Management also supported the Office by administering general temporary positions using funds allocated to the Department to support the Office of the President. In line with resolution 58/126, five posts were available to the Office on an annual basis to supplement support: two at the D-2 level, one at the D-1 level, one at the P-5 level and one at the General Service level. The Under-Secretary-General stated that the President had full flexibility in the assignment of responsibilities and key functions within the office and may establish additional temporary positions during a financial year, including by using extrabudgetary resources available through the voluntary contributions of Member States to the trust fund in support of the Office of the President of the General Assembly. In addition, several departments provided the following staffing and services: the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management: the services of translators and text processors, as well as protocol and correspondence and policy guidance and human resources support from the Executive Office; the Department of Operational Support: a car and driver for official purposes; the Department of Safety and Security: two security officers; the Department of Global Communications: a spokesperson for the term of office; and the Office of Legal Affairs: legal assistance and guidance.

19. The Under-Secretary-General added that the Secretariat also provided office space and equipment, including transitional office space for Presidents-elect during the interim period between their election in June and the opening of the session in September, as well as temporary space for the incoming and outgoing staff and other personnel. With regard to funding, the Under-Secretary-General gave a briefing on the fact that funding of the Office of the President of the General Assembly was provided through the appropriation of resources under section 1 of the programme budget. He recalled that, effective 1998, the Assembly had approved the amount of $250,000 per annum for the Office under segment (b) for the President of the General Assembly, to be adjusted for inflation and approved reductions. The Under-Secretary-

General stated that the regular budget continued to be complemented by extrabudgetary resources received from the trust fund in support of the Office of the President of the General Assembly. With regard to other support provided by the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management, the Under-Secretary-General mentioned that, to facilitate the transition between sessions, the Department had assumed the lead role within the Secretariat in putting together an induction programme commencing with the Office of the President of the seventy-first session. In addition, the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council Affairs Division of the Department served as the repository of institutional memory of best practices and past precedents and as the substantive backstopping office for the Office of the President.

20. The Co-Chair followed up after the intervention and asked for the basis on which the President of the General Assembly was charged, whereas the Secretary-General was not being charged for equivalent services. The Under-Secretary-General responded that there were mandates for those services to be provided to the Secretary-General and related resources appropriated, whereas resources for the President had not evolved since the fifty-second session. All those arrangements had been decided by Member States.

21. In an interactive segment, seven delegations and the Co-Chair posed questions to the Under-Secretary-General for General Assembly and Conference Management on a few issues. With regard to budget and staffing, delegations asked for details on the allocation of the regular budget provided to backstop the Office of the President of the General Assembly, and how the five posts funded under the regular budget were assigned and managed. Another delegation enquired about existing oversight mechanisms related to financial and human resources matters and the methods of reporting to the Board of Auditors and the Office of Internal Oversight Services. One speaker asked the Secretariat to provide a comparison of the number of resolutions adopted and meetings mandated in the General Assembly over recent years. The Co-Chair again raised the question of why the President of the General Assembly was required to pay for the use of the teleprompter in the General Assembly Hall. In response to the questions, the Under-Secretary-General reiterated that the funds approved by the Assembly to support the President of the General Assembly during the fifty-second session had not changed since, except for adjustments for inflation. With regard to the five posts funded from the regular budget, authority and flexibility were given to the President to allocate and define the functions of the aforementioned posts. The Under-Secretary-General assured delegations that the financial, administrative and human resources matters of the Office of the President were handled by his department and audited regularly by the Board of Auditors and the Office of Internal Oversight Services. Addressing the question on the increase in the volume of work of the Assembly, he stated that, while the number of resolutions adopted remained the same, the number of mandates and processes given to the President to lead had increased drastically. With regard to the issue of the teleprompter, the Under-Secretary-General clarified that, while services for calendar meetings were provided without charge, non-calendar meetings, under which most of the meetings organized by the President fell, did not have allocations from the regular budget approved by Assembly.

22. In a subsequent debate, 23 delegations took the floor, including on behalf of three groups, with statements focused mostly on the funding and staffing issues faced by the Office of the President of the General Assembly. Most delegations called for adequate human and financial resources to be allocated to the Office. A speaker pointed out that the Assembly, as the only universal policymaking body of the United Nations, must be treated with the importance that its critical role deserved in the multilateral system. Proposals to increase both the amount and percentage of funds allocated to the Office from the regular budget were made by several delegations. A few speakers cautioned that overreliance on the voluntary trust fund could erode the accountability and transparency of the Office and that staying dependent on voluntary contributions and the secondment of staff from Member States might discourage countries lacking resources from seeking the Presidency. One speaker underlined that the provision of funding from the regular budget for non-calendar meetings was vital to the functioning of the President and his office. With regard to staffing, calls for an increase in funding from the regular budget for permanent posts in the Office of the President were made, including a recommendation to place a cap on the size of the Office. Delegations stressed the importance of keeping a core group of staff, and asked Member States to consider the creation of additional posts at the P-5 level. Diversity, geographical balance, a balance in gender and in different regions and groups of Member States in terms of numbers and level of responsibility, as well as transparency in secondments to the Office of the President, were named as priorities by several delegations.

23. Some delegations highlighted the oath of office of the President of the General Assembly, the disclosure of financial information upon the assumption and completion of duties, and the code of ethics stipulated in paragraph 58 of resolution 70/305 as milestones for ensuring the transparency and accountability of the President. One delegation proposed the expansion of such practices to other senior posts in the Office of the President. Another delegation called for the continuation of the practice of circulating the Summary of the Presidency of the General Assembly on the recommendations of Member States made in the annual report of the Security Council, as had been done by the Presidents at the sixty-ninth and seventy-fifth sessions. Member States welcomed the continued publishing of all relevant documents, including speeches made by the President, letters, and information on his or her mandates and travels, on the United Nations website. With regard to the election of the President, one delegate welcomed the commitment of candidates to sharing a vision statement and holding interactive dialogues with the Assembly during their candidacy, which could be further strengthened by the inclusion of civil society in those dialogues.

24. Emphasizing the importance of institutional memory, delegations appreciated the efforts made by the Office of the President in that regard, such as the annual retreat between Presidencies, the handover reports of the Presidents, the induction programmes organized by the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management, and the training programme organized by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for the transition of the Presidency of the General Assembly in partnership with the Permanent Missions of Ecuador, Finland and Malaysia. Others commended the convening of the informal dialogue with former Presidents of the General Assembly held on 22 February 2023. With regard to the term of the Presidency, some delegations stated that it was difficult to see the completion of mandates through within one year, and called upon the Assembly to look into the possibility of the Presidency going beyond one session. One speaker said that Article 21 of the Charter of the United Nations did not prohibit re-election and that the principle of regional rotation would not be infringed. However, another delegate said that having a one-year term would allow Presidents to present fresh ideas and create a sense of urgency to advance their priorities. One delegation recommended that the rotation of the Presidency and of the Chairs of the Main Committees occur on 1 January of each year while retaining high-level week in September and the end of the main session in December. That would allow the President and the Chairs adequate time to be prepared for their work.

25. Some delegations touched on other priorities, such as gender balance and multilingualism. Delegations underlined the importance of striving for gender balance when it came to the composition of the Office of the President, the composition of panels for high-level meetings and, more important, putting forward nominations for female candidates for the position of President at future sessions. Recalling that multilingualism was a fundamental principle of the Charter of the United Nations, one speaker emphasized that the composition of the Office, as well as the modalities of its work, should reflect the cultural and linguistic diversity of the membership. Another delegate pointed out that most of the documents of the Office of the President existed only in English, and called for greater efforts to be made to have documents available in all official languages. One delegation encouraged Member States to strengthen the engagement of civil society, youth, the private sector and other stakeholders across the board. Member States expressed their readiness to continue to support all continuing efforts to strengthen the central role and authority of the General Assembly, and called upon the Co-Chairs to work towards an ambitious and consensus draft resolution that would also enjoy the widest possible support of Member States.

III. Conclusion

26. In accordance with its mandate, the Working Group endeavoured to identify key issues of concern and possible consensus, to examine the current status of implementation of those issues and either to take action or to indicate possible further action to be taken.

27. At its final meeting, held on 7 July 2023, the Working Group considered and adopted the present report, including the draft resolution contained in section IV (see para. 29).

28. At the same meeting, the Secretary read out a statement on the programme budget implications of the draft resolution.

IV. Recommendation

29. On the basis of a draft resolution circulated by the Co-Chairs, the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Revitalization of the Work of the General Assembly formulated the resolution set out below.

30. At its final meeting, held on 7 July 2023, the Working Group concluded its work for the seventy-seventh session. The Working Group recommended that the Assembly adopt the following draft resolution:
