I. INTRODUCTION

A. Opening of the session

1. The fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks was held in New York from 27 March to 12 April 1995. The session was convened in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 49/121 of 19 December 1993, entitled "United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks". The sixth session of the Conference will be held in New York from 24 July to 4 August 1995. 1/

2. The Chairman of the Conference made a statement at the opening of the session. 2/ In that statement, he provided, inter alia, information on the results of inter-sessional consultations held at Geneva in February 1995, at which some 25 States had been represented. He stated that the consultations had provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on the various provisions of the draft Agreement which he had prepared at the end of the fourth session and that the discussions among delegations had reinforced the constructive attitude that had prevailed at that session. He referred to a number of useful suggestions made for improving the text and expressed his expectation that those and other suggestions would be made in the plenary of the fifth session. He confirmed that inter-sessional discussions could be only preparatory in nature and that they did not, and could not, pre-empt the deliberations and decisions of the Conference. He underlined that they were nevertheless useful in that they had identified areas where more time and effort were needed and paved the way towards ultimate agreement.

3. He further noted that among the matters which generated much discussion were the following: compatibility of conservation and management measures in areas under national jurisdiction and in high seas areas; new participants in subregional or regional fisheries organizations or arrangements; enforcement of conservation and management measures in high seas areas by non-flag States; and the desirability of using the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea with respect to settlement of disputes.

4. Referring to a recent report on the state of world fisheries and aquaculture issued by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), he emphasized that action was needed on:

(a) The control of fishing effort and the reduction of the industry's overcapacity;

(b) Resource allocation decisions;

(c) The establishment of more effective users' rights; improved decision-making on resource use;

(d) The adoption of precautionary approaches to fisheries conservation and management.

5. He emphasized that the problems identified in the FAO report were the very concerns that had led to the convening of the Conference. They did not belong to one region or one group of States, but concerned the international community as a whole. He underlined that the solutions must be global in nature, and their effect must be to bring order to the oceans and to promote cooperation among States.

40. At the same meeting, the Conference approved the report of the Credentials Committee and adopted the draft decision as contained in paragraph 8 of the report.

V. VOLUNTARY FUND

41. In paragraph 5 of resolution 49/121, the General Assembly renewed its request to Governments and regional economic integration organizations to contribute to the voluntary fund established for the purpose of assisting developing countries, especially those most concerned by the subject-matter of the Conference, in particular the least developed among them, to participate fully and effectively in the Conference.

42. A contribution to the fund with respect to the fifth session was received from Canada. Travel assistance for attending this session was granted to representatives of eight States falling under the provisions of paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 47/192. Travel expenses shall be reimbursed to representatives of four other such States.

VI. CLOSING OF THE SESSION

43. At the 80th meeting, held on 12 April 1995, the Chairman introduced a complete revised text of the Draft Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks (A/CONF.164/22/Rev.1), which he had prepared on the basis of documents A/CONF.164/CRP.6 and Add.1.

44. At the same meeting, the Chairman made a closing statement. 5/ He expressed his belief that considerable progress had been made during the current session in all areas of work of the Conference.

45. He also recalled the mandate of the Conference given in resolution 47/192 and stressed that the Conference must deliver an outcome which would provide for better conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks as a whole, based on compatible measures taken in areas within national jurisdiction and those on the high seas, the use of the precautionary approach, including the use of reference points, and requirements relating to data collection. He emphasized that sustainable use of these resources was the common responsibility of all who were present-day custodians of the resource.

46. With respect to the revised text of the Draft Agreement, he noted, inter alia, that it took a balanced approach between the interests of the coastal States and those of distant-water fishing nations. Those were, however, not the only interests that had to be considered; the collective interests of the international community must also be taken into account if the sustainable use of those resources for present and future generations was to be secured.

47. He stated that in order to achieve the objective of long-term conservation and sustainable use of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, the text created three essential pillars. It provided for principles and practices on which better management of stocks should be based and sought to establish compatible conservation and management regimes both inside and outside areas of national jurisdiction. It attempted to ensure that the conservation and management measures adopted for the high seas were adhered to, and complied with, and that they were not undermined. For that purpose, basic standards and principles needed to be set in a global agreement in order to avoid a proliferation of different rights with differing degrees of assertions, with a view to promoting certainty and stability in the oceans for all. Finally, it provided for peaceful settlement of disputes by establishing procedures which would promote the sustainable use of resources through improved cooperation among States.

48. The text acknowledged, he further noted, that stocks must be managed in an effective way. It also recognized the biological unity of stocks and the different legal regimes applying in the areas of national jurisdiction and on the high seas consistent with the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. In devising measures for better management, the text went beyond just addressing the problems of the high seas, and sought to establish that better management of stocks was the responsibility of all States and in all zones, taking into account the respective competencies of States under the Convention.

49. In concluding, he recalled that the next session would be the final one, at which the Conference should conclude its work by adopting an Agreement. He emphasized that much of the time would have to be devoted to technical aspects relating to the finalization of the text and its harmonization in all languages, and that the Conference would also need to look at the draft Final Act which the Secretariat would prepare. He recognized, however, that during the very early part of the final session, the Conference might have to consider some of the substantive matters with a view to improving the text. Finally, he encouraged those who wished to undertake informal consultations in preparation for the next session to do so. He reminded the delegations that the programme of work for the next session had been decided at the fourth session. 6/

50. At the same meeting, statements were made by the representatives of Brazil, Peru, Estonia, Norway, Chile, the United States, Japan, Indonesia, China, Australia (on behalf of the member countries of the South Pacific Forum Fisheries Agency), Argentina, Poland, the Russian Federation, Uruguay, the Republic of Korea, Canada, Iceland, Senegal, Morocco, Sri Lanka and Mexico, as well as by the representative of the European Community. The observers for Greenpeace International and for the World Wide Fund for Nature also made statements.
