I. Introduction

1. The triennial comprehensive policy review of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, which the General Assembly undertook at its fifty-ninth session in 2004, led to the adoption of resolution 59/250. In paragraph 100 of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed that the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should take appropriate action for the full implementation of the resolution, in line with paragraphs 91 and 92 of resolution 56/201, in which the General Assembly reiterated a request to the executive heads of those funds, programmes and specialized agencies to submit a yearly progress report to their governing bodies on measures taken and envisaged for the implementation of the resolution for the triennial comprehensive policy review.

2. The present report has been prepared to implement paragraph 101 of resolution 59/250, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, after consultation with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 2005, on an appropriate management process, containing clear guidelines, targets, benchmarks and time frames for the full implementation of the resolution.

3. In resolution 59/250, the Assembly called on the United Nations system, its organizations and its inter-agency structures to enhance the capacity of the system to perform its role in development cooperation by promoting action capable of achieving tangible results.

4. After reviewing the overall framework of the provisions of resolution 59/250 (in sections II and III), the present report provides — in section IV (in the form of a matrix) — a summary of the initiatives promoted by the system to implement resolution 59/250, specifying actions, targets, benchmarks and time frames at the agency and inter-agency levels. In 2006, the Council will review progress being made in the implementation process as indicated in paragraph 102 of the resolution.

5. The present report is also the outcome of a consultation process with the organizations of the United Nations system, its funds, programmes, specialized agencies and other United Nations entities, and its inter-agency mechanisms, in particular the UNDG, and the High-level Committee on Programme (HLCP) of the CEB.

6. In preparing this management process, special attention has been devoted to the need to promote an integrated approach to development cooperation, ensuring that the policy directives formulated at the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review are appropriately implemented on a system-wide basis.

7. The management process should assist the Council in fulfilling its main responsibility in development cooperation, which is to improve the quality and impact of the operational activities of the United Nations and promote an integrated approach, and ensure that the policy directives formulated by the General Assembly at the triennial comprehensive policy review are implemented on a system-wide basis, providing coordination and guidance in accordance with Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 as provided in the third preambular paragraph of resolution 59/250. Moreover, the Council will also consider the annual reports of the executive boards and heads of the United Nations funds and programmes, as well as other reports submitted to its operational activities segment in the light of resolution 59/250.

8. In preparing this management process, special attention was also devoted to the need to ensure the full implementation of all the elements of Assembly resolutions 44/211, 47/199, 50/120, 53/192 and 56/201 and those sections of its resolution 52/12 B, relevant to operational activities for development, which should be considered an integral part of resolution 59/250.

9. The present report should be seen in conjunction with the report on “Funding options and modalities for financing operational activities for development of the United Nations system”, prepared in compliance with paragraph 24 of resolution 59/250 (to be issued), and the quantitative information provided in the annual compendium of statistical data on operational activities for development (see A/60/74-E/2005/57).

10. The management process should be reviewed in conjunction with the information contained in the programme of work for the implementation of reforms by the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to further simplify and harmonize their rules and procedures in compliance with paragraphs 36 and 37 of resolution 59/250, which is being prepared in full consultation with all members of the UNDG and will be submitted, through the UNDG Executive Committee, to the attention of the Council in a separate document.

II. Role of the United Nations system’s development cooperation and internationally agreed development goals

11. The 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review represented a major opportunity to confirm the role of development cooperation of the United Nations system through guiding principles and policy orientations for its country-level activities for development and their modalities. Those activities support country-level efforts of developing countries to pursue the achievement of the objectives of the Millennium Declaration and other relevant United Nations conferences and summits. The development work of the United Nations system is an integral part of the overall effort of the international community to achieve development goals agreed on those occasions.

12. This role is rooted in the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, which are emphasized in resolution 59/250. The key aim of the development support from the system is to respond to the needs of developing countries flexibly, shaping operational activities to better respond to their demands, in accordance with their policies and priorities.

13. By starting from this premise, the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review raised a key question, i.e., whether — at this pivotal historical juncture, as the agreed global development agenda is being tested — the United Nations system is equipped and organized to play the role expected of it. While the Council and, in September 2005, the Assembly will undertake the five-year review of the implementation of the Millennium Declaration, the present report is intended to stimulate a discussion about the system’s response to the provisions of resolution 59/250.

14. Through its operational activities for development, the system can significantly contribute to the country-level implementation of the commitments that the international community made in the Millennium Declaration and other major conferences and summits, especially owing to its catalytic and advocacy functions. However, the system should align its activities to well-defined sets of national development priorities that pursue the country-level implementation of those internationally agreed development goals. The system should also pursue a comprehensive, integrated and multidimensional approach to development. It is crucial that economic, social, environmental and humanitarian factors are taken into account in the attempt to build stable and sustainable conditions for economic growth and social development, in full respect of universally shared ethical values such as equity, justice, participatory development, respect for human rights and protection of the most vulnerable social groups.

15. Three main concepts stressed throughout resolution 59/250 lay the foundation for an overall strategy, which is reflected in the “management process” reported in section IV:

(a) National Governments have the primary responsibility for their countries’ development, on the basis of their national strategies and priorities;

(b) It is essential to pursue full implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration;

(c) The United Nations system should focus on long-term development challenges and on enhancing national capacity to pursue poverty eradication, sustained economic growth and sustainable development.

III. The approach of resolution 59/250: an overview

16. The actions and targets identified in section IV in the matrix on the “management process” are not just a series of separate activities that respond to specific requests but are components of an overall endeavour and reflect a global vision of the United Nations system development cooperation role. Before analysing that matrix, it is appropriate to place those actions in the framework of the principles and general orientations adopted in resolution 59/250, which are consistent with the Millennium Declaration and other major policy positions emanating from the General Assembly.

A. Integrating the activities of the United Nations system with national plans and priorities: national ownership and participation

17. National ownership of the development cooperation activities carried out by the United Nations system is central to resolution 59/250. Constant efforts by all organizations of the system are required to ensure that country-level operations are carried out for the benefit of recipient countries, at their request and in accordance with their own development policies and priorities. The General Assembly refers to a variety of situations where national policies can be defined, including through such instruments as development plans, poverty reduction strategies (and poverty reduction strategy papers, where they exist). Regardless of the specific national circumstances, ownership is expressed by the exercise of national leadership and the fulfilment of the responsibility of national Government to coordinate all types of external assistance, effectively integrating such assistance into their development process.

18. Although the expertise and activities of the organizations of the United Nations system are shaped by the decisions of their different governing bodies, at the country level, national development plans, policies and priorities should “constitute the only viable frame of reference for programming” (resolution 59/250, para. 3). In that respect, special attention is needed to enhance the coherence of the United Nations system at the country level. The Assembly notes that greater coherence of the systems’ operational activities for development can be achieved with the help of such assessment and planning tools as the common country assessment (CCA) and the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), but those tools need to be further integrated into national planning and programming. Regarding the UNDAF, the Assembly reiterates that “the ownership of national authorities and their full participation in the preparation and development of the UNDAF are key to guaranteeing that it responds to the national development plans and poverty reduction strategies of the countries concerned” (resolution 59/250, para. 49), requesting that the UNDAF and its results matrix be endorsed and countersigned by the national authorities when they become the common programming tool for country-level contributions of the funds and programmes towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

19. At the same time, the Assembly requests that organizations of the system with multi-year programmes, which carry on operational activities in pursuit of the Millennium Development Goals, fully align their respective programming and monitoring with the UNDAF, taking further steps to harmonize their programming cycles with the national programming instruments (resolution 59/250, para. 51). This is consistent with the recognition of the positive contribution that the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, can make in providing direction to the operational activities of the system in accordance with national development efforts and priorities (resolution 59/250, para. 3).

B. Partnership and support to national capacity-building

20. Two key pillars of the conceptual framework emerging from resolution 59/250 are:

(a) The concept of “partnership”, especially in the relationships of the United Nations system with recipient countries;

(b) The centrality of the development of national capacities for the system’s country-level activities.

21. With regard to the first pillar, the international community should assist developing countries in their national development efforts in partnership with them. The strength of the operational functions of the United Nations system lies in its legitimacy as a neutral, objective and trusted partner for both recipient countries and donor countries (resolution 59/250, para. 4). The system should further strengthen the capacity of developing countries, including through better utilization of various new aid modalities (resolution 59/250, twelfth preambular para. and para. 30), such as sector-wide approaches and budget support.

22. The Assembly also encourages Governments to develop partnerships within the national context, creating an environment which links them with the United Nations development system, civil society, national non-governmental organizations and the private sector in the development process, seeking innovative solutions to development problems and it requests the United Nations system to assist national Governments in this domain (resolution 59/250, seventh preambular para. and para. 9).

23. Concerning the second pillar, the well-established partnership of the United Nations system with developing countries is conducive to more effective support to national capacity-building, a central goal of the development cooperation provided by the system. Among measures to ensure sustainability in capacity-building activities, the Assembly reiterates that United Nations organizations should use, to the fullest extent possible, national execution and available national expertise and technologies in implementing their operational activities.

24. In order to support capacity development, the Assembly requested CEB to analyse the capacity-building development efforts of the United Nations system and make recommendations to enhance their effectiveness.

25. Organizations of the system will support the efforts of developing countries to establish and/or maintain effective national institutions, including through national strategies for capacity-building (resolution 59/250, paras. 26 and 31). The Assembly urged all the organizations of the system to mainstream in their activities modalities to support South-South cooperation, another form of partnership with potential to enhance development effectiveness.

C. Capacity of the United Nations system to contribute to development results

26. In its assessment of the effectiveness of the United Nations system, the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review questioned both the capacity of the system in the domain of development cooperation, and the relevance of its country-level activities. The Assembly recognized the mutually reinforcing links between increased effectiveness, efficiency and coherence of the United Nations development system and underscored the need to achieve concrete results in assisting developing countries to eradicate poverty and achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development. It also stressed the importance of the provision of adequate resources to the United Nations development system to enhance its capacity.

27. The Assembly noted with concern that the system has not benefited commensurately from recent increases in official development assistance (ODA), despite the additional tasks entrusted to it in the implementation and follow-up of internationally agreed goals.

28. For that reason, in resolution 59/250 the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to explore various funding options for increasing financing for operational activities and to examine ways to enhance the predictability, long-term stability, reliability and adequacy of their funding (resolution 59/250, paras. 14, 16 and 24), which is the subject of a separate report.

29. To assess the capacity of the system to perform its development cooperation function, it is necessary to define how and when progress is achieved in relation to the many internationally agreed development goals. That entails adherence to a comprehensive and integrated approach to development. The fundamental message that emerges from resolution 59/250 in that regard is that developing countries should be able to draw fully on the entire system's "accumulated experience in all pertinent economic, social and other domains", using the whole range of services available through the organizations of the system, on the basis of their comparative advantages and expertise (resolution 59/250, para. 44).

30. In spite of the efforts made so far by the system to achieve greater country-level programmatic coherence and foster teamwork among the organizations of the system, their participation in country-level operational activities for development and coordination mechanisms still differs in level, quality and intensity, and "for some organizations it is inadequate" (resolution 59/250, paras. 42-43). The Assembly has reaffirmed the principle that the country-level presence of the United Nations system should be tailored to meet the specific development needs of recipient countries.

31. That presence is determined not only by the existence of well-staffed country offices but — for those agencies or entities of the United Nations system that have no or limited country representation — by the services that each organization can make available to a wide range of recipient countries. Such a presence should reflect the substantive requirements of development cooperation. The skills and expertise assembled by the system at the country level — also through appropriate tools of inter-agency knowledge management — should be commensurate with what is needed to deliver on the priorities specified in each country's UNDAF, which in turn should be in line with the national development strategies and plans, corresponding to the technical backstopping and capacity-building needs and requirements of the developing countries (resolution 59/250, para. 63).

32. The "management process" will provide details on how to increase the system-wide capacity and the development relevance of its service. The governing bodies of organizations of the United Nations development system were invited to consider the means to strengthen the organizations' country-level capacities, including through complementary measures at their headquarters (resolution 59/250, para. 65). CEB was requested, in collaboration with the UNDG, to take the necessary steps to secure a more participatory involvement of the United Nations development system in the country-level operations and their coordination mechanisms, including through promotion, decentralization, delegation of authority and multi-year programming. The Assembly stressed the importance of the CCA as the common analytical tool of the United Nations system at the country level, including the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations agencies with no country representation or limited country-level presence, whose analytical and normative experience should be better used (resolution 59/250, paras. 44-46).

D. United Nations reform process

33. After years of efforts to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations system and its country-level functioning and operations for development, the 2004 triennial comprehensive policy review took stock of the progress achieved in the area of coordination and encouraged further efforts.

34. The reform processes under way should be continued with the active involvement of the entire United Nations development system, including through the UNDG and the CEB. Areas that are singled out by the Assembly for these reforms include, inter alia, simplification and harmonization of processes, the CCA and the UNDAF, the resident coordinator system, evaluation activities, capacity-building efforts, gender issues, regional dimensions and transition from relief to development.

35. Harmonization measures should be associated with tangible achievements in terms of actual simplification of processes and a significant reduction in the administrative and procedural burden on the organizations and their national partners that derives from the preparation and implementation of operational activities. The organizations of the system were requested to further simplify their rules and procedures, giving high priority to the rationalization of their country presence, including through appropriate inter-agency arrangements (for those agencies that cannot afford to maintain country offices). Simplification is not limited to administrative work. For example, the CCA, meant to be short, light and flexible, should be complementary to other analytical processes, and duplication in analytical work should be avoided.

36. In that context, a key role is played by the resident coordinator system for the effective and efficient functioning of the United Nations system at the country level. United Nations organizations should enhance their support to the resident coordinator system in financial, technical and/or organizational terms, stressing the fundamental notion that the resident coordinator system is owned by the United Nations development system as a whole and its functioning should be participatory, collegial and accountable. In that context, the Assembly requested the development, by the end of 2005, of a comprehensive accountability framework for resident coordinators to exercise oversight over the design and implementation of the UNDAF, under the leadership of national Governments.

IV. Management of the implementation of resolution 59/250: specific actions, guidelines, benchmarks and targets at the system-wide level

37. In its resolution 59/250, the General Assembly reaffirmed and clarified further the main goals assigned to the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, their achievements and the challenges that they face, prescribing concrete tasks related to different goals. The “management process” of the implementation of resolution 59/250 illustrated in this section provides details about the issues addressed in the resolution, corresponding targets for the United Nations system as a whole and/or its components, concrete actions planned to pursue those targets, specific entities of the system that are responsible for those actions, and the time frames for their execution.

38. All those elements are illustrated in the following matrix, grouped by individual themes, which strictly follow the structure and the sequence of the 12 sections of resolution 59/250.
