Operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation*Results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system*Report of the Secretary-GeneralSummary*

The present report reviews progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system. It is based on the report of the Secretary-General on the management process for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 (E/2008/49), which was submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2008 and which represents the action plan of the United Nations development system to implement the resolution.

The report was prepared in consultation with the organizations of the United Nations system and inter-agency mechanisms. Progress on actions taken and targets set by the United Nations system to implement the resolution are summarized in the annex.

I. Introduction

1. The General Assembly, in its resolution 62/208 on the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive sessions in 2009 and 2010, detailed reports on results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to the resolution in order to evaluate the implementation of the resolution. Subsequently, the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2009/1, requested the Secretary-General to continue such reporting in 2011 and 2012 in response to General Assembly resolution 63/232, in which the Assembly decided on a quadrennial cycle for the comprehensive policy review. The present report responds to the mandate and guidance provided by all relevant resolutions.¹

2. In 2008, a report was submitted to the Economic and Social Council on the management process for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 (E/2008/49). Its matrix on actions, targets and benchmarks serves as the main reference for tracking progress. Two progress reports on results achieved and measures implemented were submitted to the Council in 2009 (E/2009/68) and 2010 (E/2010/70). The latter serves as baseline for the present progress report, which tracks progress made between March 2010 and March 2011.

II. Overall role and functioning of United Nations development cooperation and overview of progress in the implementation of resolution 62/208

3. In its resolution 62/208, the General Assembly recognized that the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, offer a framework for planning and assessing the activities of the United Nations development system. In its resolution 64/289 on system-wide coherence, the General Assembly provided further guidance for strengthening the role of the United Nations development system in this regard.

4. At the system-wide level, the three pillars of the Chief Executives Board for Coordination continued to mobilize system-wide capacities to respond to national needs and accelerate progress towards the achievement of the millennium development goals/internationally agreed development goals in accordance with the triennial comprehensive policy review guidance and subsequent updates. The United Nations Development Group and the High-level Committee on Management continued to work collaboratively to promote harmonization and simplification of business practices to reduce transaction costs and increase the system's overall aid effectiveness.

5. At the country-level, the resident coordinator system continued to strengthen its role as the main mechanism to coordinate the operational activities of the United Nations development system.

¹ Economic and Social Council resolutions 2009/1 and 2010/22 and General Assembly resolutions 63/232 and 64/289.

6. These efforts, together with the lessons learned from the “Delivering as One” pilot experience are helping to develop innovative measures to improve support by the United Nations system to national priorities. The findings of the upcoming independent review of the Delivering as One initiative will further advance the implementation of the triennial comprehensive policy review and provide guidance for the preparation of the next review.

III. Funding for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system

7. In 2009, contributions received by the United Nations development system amounted to $21.9 billion, which is equal to the amount received in 2008 in real terms. About 65 per cent was directed to longer-term development-related activities against 35 per cent to humanitarian assistance. Contributions for development-related activities increased by 6.8 per cent, while humanitarian assistance funding declined by 7.4 per cent.

8. Despite these trends, 65 per cent of total core resources for development-related activities in 2009 still depended on 10 Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development/Development Assistance Committee countries. This heavy reliance on a few donors, combined with the high share of non-core resources — 73 per cent of United Nations operational activities funding in 2009 — contribute to the unpredictability of overall funding. Most United Nations organizations have developed integrated multi-year funding frameworks to increase predictability and sustainability of funding but, so far, no significant advances have been made (see A/66/79-E/2011/107).

9. In 2009, some 88 per cent of non-core funding for development-related activities was single-donor and programme — or project-specific. This leads to the fragmentation of resource flows and has a negative impact on overall programme coherence, efficiency and transaction costs. New mechanisms of pooled resources, such as multi-donor trust funds and thematic funds, have only recently begun to play a role in the overall funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system (ibid.).

IV. Contribution of United Nations operational activities to national capacity development and development effectiveness

A. Capacity development

10. Since October 2006, the United Nations Development Group has recognized capacity development as one of five key principles for United Nations country programming. The United Nations Development Group as a system and individual members have continued to develop guidelines, and tools to promote a system-wide approach in support of capacity development efforts in programme countries and to provide United Nations country teams with practical tools to integrate capacity development in their activities, such as the United Nations Development Group capacity assessment methodology and toolkit and the reference guide for better aid for development effectiveness. Capacity development is also referenced in the new

United Nations Development Assistance Framework guidelines and is a component of all training events under the Framework.

11. An increasing number of United Nations country teams are reflecting capacity development results in their planning, programming, monitoring and evaluation. In 2009, 69 country teams reported pursuing a coordinated capacity development approach and supporting integration of capacity development into common programme documents and action plans. At least 10 country teams integrated capacity development into the United Nations Development Assistance Framework in 2010. These approaches, however, need to be implemented more broadly. Indicators to assess sustainability of capacity development activities also need to be developed.

12. In 2009, over 20 country teams focused their capacity development support on improving national statistical, monitoring and evaluation capacities, including for measuring progress towards the Millennium Development Goals. Some 80 country teams reported supporting capacity development of national and local stakeholders, including civil society actors, in aid modalities, management, coordination and impact evaluation. Sixty-two country teams reported strengthening national capacities for the design, set-up and effective use of aid information management systems, and 55 participated in 154 sector-wide approaches.

13. Support to South-South and triangular cooperation is also becoming an important vehicle for national capacity development. The International Fund for Agricultural Development recently signed six South-South cooperation arrangements in the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR) region to facilitate transfer of agricultural know-how and technology to Africa. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) established strategic partnership frameworks with Brazil, China, and Turkey to bring the experiences, knowledge and resources of those countries in support of programme countries. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) signed 45 tripartite agreements on South-South cooperation and fielded over 1,500 experts and technicians. At the system-wide level, supporting South-South and triangular cooperation for capacity development is one of the strategic priorities of the United Nations Development Group for 2010-2011.

14. National execution modalities and the use of national systems are increasingly recognized as critical to strengthening national capacities to manage the development process. They are not, however, systematically applied, tracked and reported on system-wide.

15. The diversity of national capacity needs and the broad spectrum of activities required to address them place considerable demands on United Nations country teams. To date, only a few country teams have put in place comprehensive capacity development strategies that take into account the host country's development status, the donor community's structure, and the specific role and skills required from the country teams.

16. Considerable efforts have been made at the system-wide level to address United Nations country team capacity gaps with regard to support to the development of national capacity. The United Nations Development Group has established capacity development networks open to all United Nations agencies and external experts (e.g., MDGNet, URITALK, devLink) and facilitated inter-agency peer learning, exchange of knowledge and resources for staff and national stakeholders, communities of practice, and sharing of evaluation databases. Further progress will require innovative ways to transfer United Nations knowledge and expertise to the country level, through, for example, more effective involvement of regional United Nations Development Group teams, rapid deployment of specialized staff and inter-agency mobility.

B. South-South cooperation and development of national capacities

17. In 2010/11, the United Nations system continued to strengthen its support to South-South and triangular cooperation in response to the request of the High-Level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, that the system reinvestigate its role in this area (see General Assembly resolution 64/222).

18. The 2010 United Nations Development Assistance Framework guidelines provide entry points for South-South cooperation. The reference guide for United Nations country teams on better aid for development effectiveness also includes guidance to promote South-South and triangular cooperation. The regional United Nations Development Group teams and the regional coordination mechanisms, facilitate access by the United Nations country teams to regional and global expertise and resources on South-South and triangular cooperation as part of their support to the quality and coherence of programming and operations and the implementation of the management and accountability system. Many country teams are also supporting national Governments in promoting South-South cooperation as a pillar for capacity development, by, for example, facilitating exchange of information, technical expertise and lessons learned between countries and between Governments and civil society organizations.

19. At the system-wide level, the UNDP Special Unit on South-South Cooperation in collaboration with the United Nations Development Group/United Nations Development Operations Coordination Office is developing new operational guidelines for the implementation of the Nairobi outcome document, adopted at the High-Level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation. Efforts are also under way to draft a collaborative framework on South-South cooperation for climate change, food security and HIV/AIDS.

20. The Unit continues to make progress in transforming the Web of Information for Development (WIDE) into a global knowledge network on South-South cooperation. The success of WIDE will depend on its ability to attract and engage all relevant development stakeholders.

21. Some United Nations organizations are strengthening their support to South-South cooperation. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) established Centres for Industrial Cooperation and opened a Centre for Renewable Energy and Energy Efficiency in Cape Verde with a focus on South-South cooperation and technology transfer. UNICEF issued new South-South cooperation guidance to its staff, and ensured more systematic reporting and sharing of lessons learned and good practices. A few agencies, such as the International Labour Organization (ILO), are integrating the outcome of the Nairobi Conference into their overall strategies for South-South cooperation. More systematic efforts, however, are required to translate the Nairobi outcome document into a system-wide approach to South-South cooperation.

C. Gender equality and women's empowerment

22. Efforts continued to strengthen the performance and accountability of United Nations country teams in mainstreaming gender equality and the empowerment of women in operational activities. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework guidelines now identify gender equality as one of the key programming principles; a set of performance indicators (scorecard) on gender equality and the empowerment of women, have been rolled out to all countries; a resource guide for gender theme groups will be fully updated by the end of 2011; and an inter-agency e-training module on gender equality has also been developed to create a common understanding of gender equality, women's rights and gender mainstreaming among all United Nations agencies. An initiative was launched in three countries to identify elements that contribute to more effective and holistic programming on gender equality. The Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality and its task forces continue to be an effective venue for most United Nations system organizations to share good practices, tools, methodologies and evaluations with United Nations country teams.

23. Since 2004, annual reports of resident coordinators have shown overall positive trends in country team support to gender issues. Joint initiatives have increased considerably, particularly initiatives on ending violence against women, which more than doubled; on reproductive health and maternal mortality; and on political participation. The number of theme groups on gender equality and of country team workplans reflecting gender equality and the empowerment of women as key elements has also steadily increased. In 2009, 99 gender theme groups were reported, compared to 37 in 2004. The number of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks containing references to gender equality and/or women's empowerment in at least one outcome statement increased from 41 in 2004 to 53 in 2009, and at least a third focused on strengthening national accountability to better monitor gender equality outcomes.

24. Despite progress in tracking gender equality initiatives, weak accountability for gender equality continues to be a key challenge. Information on the impact of these initiatives, especially the impact of joint programming, on gender mainstreaming continues to be limited. Meta-evaluations of gender equality work within different United Nations agencies, as well as by United Nations country teams need to be strengthened. More adequate information on United Nations system investments on gender equality throughout its entire programming framework, also needs to be provided. Only a few agencies (e.g. the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNDP and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs) have introduced a system of gender markers in their budget systems to identify resources expected to lead to gender equality results. According to available information, dedicated resources for gender equality in gender specific interventions amount to only 3 to 4 per cent of total United Nations Development Assistance Framework resources.

25. The creation of UN-Women in July 2010, in response to General Assembly resolution 64/289 on system-wide coherence, is expected to herald a new era of leadership and accountability for United Nations support for gender equality and empowerment of women. In particular, UN-Women is expected to deliver technical support to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework process to strengthen accountability, standards, availability of gender expertise and leadership at the country level.

26. UN-Women will submit a detailed report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2011 on efforts and progress made in this regard by United Nations entities, including gaps and challenges in mainstreaming a gender perspective in their policies and programmes and in capacity development (see Council resolution 2010/29, para. 5). The report will also include a section on how UN-Women plans to carry out its work.

D. Transition from relief to development

27. Post-conflict and post-disaster needs assessments continued to be strengthened as tools to devise common strategies for recovery and development. Between 2009 and 2010, the United Nations, the European Union and the World Bank conducted 11 joint post-disaster needs assessments and 80 senior and middle-level staff from the United Nations, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and the European Union were trained in the use of post-conflict needs assessments. Procedural guidance on post-disaster needs assessments is being developed along with sector-specific guidance. Initial steps have also been taken to establish a roster of United Nations experts to support post-conflict needs assessments.

28. A headquarters mechanism was established to provide immediate support and guidance to United Nations leadership teams on the different roles of United Nations presences in crisis and post-crisis situations. About 100 staff members from throughout the system were trained on integrated mission planning processes and strategic frameworks. The new United Nations Development Assistance Framework guidelines also provide instructions on developing conflict-sensitive Frameworks to facilitate their use as integrated strategic frameworks for the broader United Nations presence during the transition phase.

29. Support was provided to several countries in utilizing existing funding modalities and mechanisms, including the United Nations Peacebuilding Fund, which currently supports 28 projects in 18 countries, for a total of $59.2 million. The standard support package to address capacity gaps of resident coordinator offices in crisis and post-crisis situations was also expanded to 28 countries.

30. Ensuring adequate and sustained funding for transition activities, however, remains a challenge. Further progress will require an efficient use of pooled funding mechanisms and greater country-level authority and flexibility to manage funds according to immediate priorities in the aftermath of a conflict. In this regard, the United Nations Development Group developed several guidance notes on multi-donor trust funds, as well as a comprehensive training package on joint funding mechanisms for United Nations Development Assistance Framework roll-out countries. Modalities to address capacity gaps continue to be slow, bureaucratic and inflexible. This problem has been addressed by an independent review of current civilian capacities in the aftermath of a conflict, which examined current practices and provided recommendations on the way forward.

31. Partnership with the World Bank continued to build on the 2008 Partnership Framework for Crisis and Post-Crisis Situations through collaborative policy development at Headquarters (e.g. joint approaches to post-conflict needs assessments and recovery planning, and World Bank participation in the Peacebuilding Commission) and increased strategic coordination in the field. In 2010, a multi-donor trust fund was established to further improve cooperation in crisis and post-crisis situations.

32. The evolving architecture for peacebuilding and humanitarian interventions, as well as lessons learned from the Delivery as One experience, will offer new opportunities to strengthen partnerships with the World Bank and other partners in crisis and post-crisis contexts.

V. Improved functioning of the United Nations development system

A. Coherence, effectiveness and relevance

Common country assessment and United Nations Development Assistance Framework

33. The United Nations development system continued to strengthen the United Nations Development Assistance Framework as its primary programming framework supporting national development planning. In 2011, the United Nations Development Group will conduct, in close collaboration with the regional United Nations Development Group teams and the United Nations System Staff College, a review of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks developed in 2009-2010 against the baseline of 2007-2008.

34. New generations of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks have been increasingly aligned and harmonized with national planning and programming cycles. In 2010, 97 United Nations country teams reported aligning their United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks to national planning cycles, and 67 to national priorities. There is scope for further strengthening the alignment of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks with national priorities. Recent United Nations Development Assistance Framework reviews show that country teams that participated in theme groups to address national development challenges that included Government representatives and bilateral donors were more effective in aligning with national priorities and in prioritizing and sequencing United Nations Development Assistance Framework support activities on the basis of the United Nations comparative advantage.

35. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework process, however, has not yet translated into coherent implementation strategies with a clear division of labour among participating agencies, nor into a strategic positioning of the United Nations support vis-à-vis national priorities in line with its comparative advantage. The diversity of programmes, mandates and operating modalities of United Nations agencies continues to constrain efforts to harmonize United Nations Development Assistance Framework activities with those of the United Nations system and other development partners.

36. The United Nations Development Group has developed a number of new tools — such as the United Nations Development Assistance Framework action plan, the common budgetary framework and the common country programme document — based on lessons learned from the Delivering as One experience to address some of these challenges (see E/2011/86). These tools are expected to strengthen United Nations Development Assistance Framework coherence and ownership by the entire system. In 2010, the United Nations Development Group also issued a standard operational format for reporting on United Nations Development Assistance Framework results, which is expected to promote transparency and accountability and strengthen national ownership and leadership of United Nations Development Assistance Framework planning and implementation.

37. So far, 16 United Nations Development Assistance Framework roll-out countries have opted to use the full range of new tools and policies. Their potential for ensuring inclusiveness, reducing transaction costs and strengthening national ownership and accountability for results is thus still being tested. The independent evaluation of the Delivering as One initiative, the findings of which will be shared with the General Assembly in 2012, will also provide some important insights in this regard. Further analysis might be required to assess the extent to which these instruments help harmonize the United Nations Development Assistance Framework with other donor practices and evolving national aid modalities.

The resident coordinator system

38. In 2010, the United Nations development system continued to improve the functioning of the resident coordinator system and further establish the central role of the resident coordinator. Major milestones in this regard are the establishment of the management and accountability system, the gradual empowerment of the resident coordinator and the increasing system-wide ownership of the resident coordinator system, all of which have helped define the relationships between various stakeholders within the United Nations system (see E/2011/86).

39. However, significant challenges remain to ensuring sufficient financial, technical and organizational support to the resident coordinator system. Different mandates, business models and funding modalities, as well as the lack of legal authority of the resident coordinator to commit United Nations country team resources, continue to constrain his/her leadership role with regard to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework.

40. The establishment of multi-donor trust funds, particularly the One UN Funds and the expanded funding window, has helped to expand the resident coordinator's role in leading the United Nations Development Assistance Framework process by enabling resident coordinators to mobilize system-wide participation and support, especially from non-resident agencies. Questions remain, however, regarding the future of these funds.

B. Regional dimensions

41. The United Nations Development Group, in its strategic priorities for 2010-2011, actively encouraged the regional United Nations Development Group teams, or regional director teams, to work closely with the regional coordination mechanisms for the delivery of technical assistance and policy advice to the United Nations country teams.

42. The two regional mechanisms hold back-to-back meetings in most regions, exchange workplans and actively participate in each others' meetings. A key result in 2010 was the production of joint regional reports issued for the annual ministerial review of the Economic and Social Council in 2010 and the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Global Millennium Development Goals in September 2010.

43. The two mechanisms also collaborate in supporting the common country assessment/United Nations Development Assistance Framework process. The contribution of regional coordination mechanisms is especially critical in exchanging South-South experiences and good practices during the preparation of new United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and in the monitoring and evaluation phases, while the regional director teams continue to support United Nations country teams on policy dialogue and priority settings, including United Nations Development Assistance Framework quality assurance and performance management.

44. At the policy level, the High-level Committee on Programmes and the regional coordination mechanisms have agreed to strengthen cooperation through joint consideration of global and interregional issues in their respective agendas.

45. The regional coordination mechanisms facilitated inter-agency initiatives, such as the production of annual reports on regional progress towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and continue to serve as an important inter-agency platform for promoting and supporting regional integration processes. The regional mechanisms are also making progress in strengthening cooperation with non-United Nations regional and subregional entities.

46. Further alignment and integration of the work of regional mechanisms can also act as an important bridge between Headquarters and country offices and can have a substantial impact in addressing capacity and resource constraints faced by many United Nations agencies.

C. Transaction costs and efficiency

47. System-wide efforts to reduce transaction costs are guided by the CEB Plan of Action for the Harmonization of Business Practices.

48. Its implementation is co-led by the United Nations Development Group and the High-level Committee on Management, and it has already achieved some important milestones that will have an impact on transaction costs (see E/2011/88). It builds on ad hoc solutions developed by United Nations country teams, including in Delivering as One pilot countries, to address specific problems/bottlenecks and find and agree on system-wide solutions. Further reform of business practices will need to balance long-term efficiency gains with the short-term transaction costs involved in adjusting different working methods, business models and governance structures to country needs. This might require the adoption of a sufficiently flexible approach to make the most of what agencies have to offer within existing regulations, policies and levels of delegated authority.

D. Country-level capacity of the United Nations development system

49. The growing responsibilities of the resident coordinator and the United Nations country teams and the increasing complexity of their work called for a re-examination of capacities and skills available at the country level to support national development efforts, particularly in crisis and post-crisis contexts.

50. United Nations country teams have started assessing their capacities as part of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework preparatory process. Assessments conducted between 2009 and 2010 in Delivering as One pilot countries confirmed a growing demand for specialized policy advisory support to deal with emerging global challenges. The system is meeting this demand through an enhanced performance appraisal and recruitment system; improved modalities for inter-agency mobility and rapid deployment of specialized staff; qualitative and targeted training opportunities for field staff; and increased sharing of knowledge and expertise across the system.

51. A second generation competency development tool was developed in 2010 to integrate lessons learned from competency assessments of over 1,400 resident coordinators and country team members of over 100 United Nations country offices. Resident coordinator competencies have also been gradually incorporated in the senior manager's job description and performance appraisal of United Nations organizations to promote the position as a possible career path for staff.

52. In 2010, over 90 per cent of United Nations System Staff College training courses were addressed to resident coordinators and country teams. In 2009, the Staff College also organized the first United Nations leaders' programme aimed at improving the knowledge and capacity of senior staff in the field. Three more such programmes were scheduled in 2010.

53. In 2010, the United Nations Development Group completed several activities to promote the exchange of knowledge and expertise across the system, beginning with the mapping of knowledge practices and tools available within and across the system, with the participation of 20 organizations. Such inventory is expected to facilitate knowledge sharing and enable common knowledge management initiatives.

54. The Human Resources Network of the CEB High-level Committee on Management has recently launched a comparative review of United Nations organizations' policies and practices for contractual agreements to identify bottlenecks to inter-agency mobility and rapid redeployment of qualified staff. Final recommendations will be considered by the High-level Committee on Management in 2011.

E. Evaluation

55. Considerable efforts were made to strengthen evaluation tools available to United Nations country teams and to improve quality assurance mechanisms for the evaluation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework. In 2010, the United Nations Development Group issued a standard operational format for reporting on United Nations Development Assistance Framework results. The United Nations Evaluation Group is conducting a stocktaking exercise of its members' practices, and a United Nations Development Assistance Framework evaluation database was also established to facilitate the identification of good practices and lessons learned in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework evaluation.

56. Evaluation tools, particularly the United Nations Development Group standard operational format, United Nations Development Assistance Framework midterm reviews and end-of-cycle evaluations, are expected to promote mutual accountability, strategic management and capacity-building. End-of-cycle independent evaluations, in particular, can contribute to the design of more relevant and effective United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks. In 2010, 59 countries conducted a United Nations Development Assistance Framework evaluation and 47 carried out an annual review. However, few United Nations country teams conducted end-of-the-cycle evaluations, while midterm reviews were conducted in 18 countries in 2009 compared to 9 in 2008.

57. Further efforts to strengthen country-level evaluation will be informed by the outcome of the Delivering as One independent evaluation, which is expected to be available during the sixty-sixth session of the General Assembly. The evaluation will build on country-led evaluations conducted in the eight Delivering as One pilot countries and take into account guidance from resolution 62/208 on the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review and intergovernmental consultations on system-wide coherence in 2008, 2009 and 2010.

58. Efforts to strengthen the evaluation function across the United Nations development system will be informed by the outcome of a comprehensive review of existing institutional frameworks for system-wide evaluation of United Nations operational activities for development. The review was commissioned by the Deputy Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 64/289 and is expected to be available for the sixty-sixth session of the Assembly.

59. A number of United Nations development organizations have also taken steps to review and adopt appropriate monitoring and evaluation policies. Currently, UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and UNIDO have all adopted evaluation policies in line with the United Nations Evaluation Group norms and standards.

F. Follow-up

60. The General Assembly, in its resolution 62/208, reaffirmed that the governing bodies of funds, programmes and specialized agencies should take appropriate action to fully implement the resolution. In response to this request, UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, the World Food Programme (WFP), as well as the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), IFAD, UNIDO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO), have all submitted annual reports to their governing bodies on the implementation of the 62/208, which reflect key areas of the review.

61. In its resolution 63/232, the General Assembly decided to change the comprehensive policy review from a triennial to a quadrennial cycle. UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP have aligned their strategic planning cycles with the quadrennial cycle, as recommended by the Assembly. The governing body of UNIDO recommended a quadrennial planning cycle starting from 2013, and UNESCO is considering a similar provision.

VI. Action taken by the United Nations system to implement resolution 62/208

62. The implementation of resolution 62/208 is presented in the form of a matrix annexed to the present report. The column headed “progress” contains information on progress made, including actions taken, measures put in place and indicative results reflective of targets and benchmarks.
