2. Indigenous Peoples Survival Foundation

(Special; 2004)

Part I. Introduction

Indigenous Peoples Survival Foundation (IPSF) was founded by indigenous peoples in 1979 as the Chitral Mission of Humanity, an organization, to preserve indigenous cultures of the Kalash & Khow tribes. These tribes have been living, secluded, for over a thousand years in the Himalayan Mountains. They are said to be the tribal descendants of the army of Alexander the Great.

Part II. Contribution of the organization to the work of the United Nations

i) Participation in the work of the Economic & Social Council and its subsidiary bodies and/or major conferences and other United Nations meetings

The Kalash & Khow people knew of the United Nations by name only, through the mainstream media. They did not know anything about the United Nation's charter or its goals. These tribes have never had any communication with the United Nations in their whole history. Even their physical links with the rest of the world, such as roads and telephone communication are cut off for six months of the year due to the isolated geography and extreme weather conditions. IPSF has worked for years to bring the voices of the Kalash & Khow tribes to the United Nations to be heard and also to distribute information from the United Nations to educate indigenous peoples of their fundamental human rights and their inherent rights to dignity and self preservation. IPSF is the only representative link, to the modern world, of the indigenous Kalash & Khow tribes of the Himalayas. IPSF introduced these tribes to the goals of the United Nations, and created awareness of these tribes' plight in the United Nations. IPSF educated both the Kalash & Khow tribes making them aware of their place within the United Nations system. The organization has attended the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (PFII) meetings since 1995, and collected, disseminated and educated the indigenous tribes, far in the mountains, about the information learned in those meetings. It took many years for IPSF to be able to accomplish this education of the indigenous tribes. This achievement has enabled the United Nations to successfully disseminate its information to these ancient peoples. The organization has also worked with the PFII and the Economic and Social Council to bring tribal leaders to the Permanent Forum meetings where they can see with their own eyes how the United Nations protects their human rights, natural resources, customs and traditions of their ancient way of life. IPSF is the only voice of these people in representing their difficulties to the United Nations as well as informing them of current practices within modern institutions, such as the United Nations, acting as a bridge. Indigenous Peoples around the world, because of their determination to live according to their customs and traditions, have consistently been marginalized and subject to abuse by the surrounding people and governments. The organization gives a voice to the voiceless, and gives a chance to indigenous peoples to share their knowledge with modern society. IPSF has actively participated in all sessions of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, at United Nations Headquarters in New York, since 2001. During the reporting period IPSF actively participated the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th sessions (10-21 May 2004, 16-27 May 2005, 15-26 May 2006 and 14-25 May 2007) by observing and preparing statements which were recorded and also made available for distribution through the services of the Indigenous Peoples Center for Documentation, Research and Information (DoCip).

ii) Activities undertaken by the organization in support of the Millennium Development Goals (MDG's)

Major actions undertaken during the reporting period were the following:

Goal 1 - Eradicate extreme poverty and hunger

Target 3: Halve, between 1990 and 2015, the proportion of people who suffer from hunger

Actions:

- Welfare delivery of wheat and food assistance, transporting wheat to 300 indigenous families year-round and 3000 families during the extreme winter months of the Himalayas when food stocks and supplies run out.
- IPSF's gave micro-loans to indigenous people so that they might stand on their own two feet. This was a sustainable way that the organization worked towards meeting the eradication of poverty goal. For example, a micro-loan of Rupees 2000, approximately 50 dollars, gave a young indigenous Kalash tribe member the ability to buy tools to start his own shoe repair business, sustaining his family and improving their standard of living.
- Organized free medical camps for indigenous tribes of Kalash & Khow tribes.
- Basic medicines were distributed and eye examinations were given free of charge as a part of the preventative medicine initiative.

Goal 2 - Achieve universal primary education

Target 1: Ensure that, by 2015, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary schooling

Actions:

- Educational MDG's were met by the IPSF's educational initiative, the World Rooftop Royal Observatory for Science, which allows students in the indigenous valleys to observe the heavens.

- IPSF's head office in Chitral, Pakistan also has a computer literacy center, where indigenous youths were able to receive a free education, learning basic computer skills to better equip them for modern job markets.

- IPSF also held weekly informal lecture series' in different villages to inform indigenous villagers about the pros and cons of unfamiliar products. For example, DDT when first introduced to the indigenous peoples was an unknown hazard and people did not know the negative consequences associated with its use. This was years after the revelation to the rest of the world that it was a highly toxic carcinogen. Some villagers had gone blind due to inadvertent ingestion of DDT by using the bags the chemical were shipped in as storage for wheat. Some women were even using it as treatment for head lice. IPSF distributed information to tribal members on the dangers of using such chemicals.

iii) Activities in support of global principles

1. The United Nations is the organization of global membership, working with governments for peace and development. IPSF is the NGO that works on a grassroots level with the public, in particular with the indigenous people for their human rights and development.

2. IPSF participates in the United Nations meetings & the Permanent Forum II every year and at all significant meetings at the headquarters in New York City, New York.

3. The president of IPSF communicates and gives many speeches to the indigenous communities in village committees, social, cultural and religious gatherings in support of the United Nation's global principles.

4. IPSF works in harmony with local people, utilizing the organization as a bridge between the Kalash and Khow tribes and the United Nations. These people have no contact with the outside world and know very little of the benefits the United Nations can offer in regards to issues pertaining to the Kalash & Khow tribes. IPSF conveys to the people their right to justice and respect for promises made by treaties and agreements.

5. IPSF conveys the message of United Nations global principles to people who have heard of the United Nations by name only. IPSF engenders positive associations of the role of the United Nations within the tribes and the benefits of such a relationship. The organization reaffirms to tribe members that they have fundamental human rights as a people and as individuals and the United Nations can help them achieve social progress to attain a better standard of life.

The report specifically mentioned PIPE President, Goodluck Diigbo for his contribution on behalf of PIPE.

iv. Economic and Social Council, Substantive Session, New York, 3-28 July 2006. PIPE president made presentation under Item 2 of the provisional agenda. The session focused on: "Creating an environment at the national and international levels conducive to generating full and productive employment and decent work for all, and its impact on sustainable development." PIPE president participated throughout process and submitted a written statement retained in the United Nations records as - E/2006/NGO/19. The final document underscores the need to address indigenous concerns. PIPE recognized that addressing the concerns of indigenous peoples requires "concrete and substantial" international support, which was why PIPE continued to reach out to governments and international organizations to promote genuine partnerships in specific areas for action, including PIPE advocacy on village development attention, development of the agricultural sector, environmental protection, right to development, skills acquisition and employment.

PART III: Cooperation with United Nations, member states, bodies and/or specialized agencies in the field and/or at Headquarters

PIPE maintained a relationship with the United Nations through collaboration with the Office of the Secretary General (PIPE's supply of information for Secretary-General's report); partnership with Permanent Mission of Republic of Peru (organizing conference and dialogue forums) collaborated with Department of Public Information (with which PIPE is also affiliated) worked with the secretariat of the United Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (UNPFII) to register PIPE's participants from different regions each year since 2002. This has created room for PIPE to bring in more representatives from indigenous groups and nations to participate in the United Nations activities, particularly those of the Economic and Social Council and United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (UNPFII). The Permanent Mission of Guatemala, cosponsored the launching of PIPE's Partnership Electronic Communication System, PECS (an internet portal), Chile and other Member States have supported several of PIPE events, which helped to strengthen indigenous people's faith in the United Nations. Through more organizing of collaborative events with United Nations Member States and bringing people who would otherwise not take part in the United Nations activities, PIPE was able to promote proper understanding of some critical issues on United Nations agenda.

PART IV Changes During Quadrennial Period Under Review

Since PIPE gained consultative status, one significant change occurred which has had significant impact on the work of PIPE in relation to the United Nations and its Member States. The General Assembly adoption of the Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples on 13 September 2007 impacted PIPE's direction in human rights dialogue. PIPE on 10 December 2007, launched a preliminary Programme of Action designed to bring all interested parties to the table in the future to iron out differences. The 60th Anniversary of Human Rights Day of 10 December 2007 was utilized by PIPE to begin the initiative. PIPE has observed the anniversary each year to reaffirm its commitment and launch new human rights strategies to keep indigenous rights in the limelight. PIPE's new Programme of Action seeks to build consensus to translate the already declared rights of indigenous peoples into specific measures within national frameworks. PIPE recognizes that by the absence of consensus in the General Assembly adoption of the Declaration of Rights of Indigenous Peoples, there is still need for extensive consultations. PIPE has realized that given current trends of bloody conflicts in regions where indigenous peoples were involved in conflicts over their rights to self-determination, control of lands and natural resources, there is still much work to be done for indigenous peoples to enjoy their rights.

PART V. Some Initiatives of PIPE during the period of this report

- i. PIPE Economic Security Workshop as Means of Achieving Millennium Development Goals, (MDGs). An initiative of PIPE organized as part of the civil society action during the 57th Annual DPI/NGO Conference, United Nations, New York, 8-10 September 2004.
- ii. Partnership Electronic Communications System, PECS: 26 May 2005, United Nations Headquarters, New York, Chairperson of United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, Ms. Victoria Tauli-Corpus launched PIPE's initiative, the first non-governmental organization Internet portal for indigenous peoples worldwide. Significantly, the event took place alongside the fourth session of the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues. PECS aided in carrying issues discussed at the Forum to the next level by extending the dialogue beyond United Nations Headquarters. It provided the opportunity to follow up issues brought to the Permanent Forum. Before then, there had been no opportunity for indigenous peoples to share their experiences once they returned home from New York. The use of the internet portal was reported in many indigenous languages and publicized by the media.
- iii. 28 September 2006, United Nations Headquarters, New York, World Village Day: PIPE initiated and observed its First World Village Day at the United Nations in New York along with partners in different regions. The event was to further raise awareness about the need for village-centred development. PIPE had suggested a World Village Day event be used by the United Nations to further promote its emphasis on village rural development. The Day has since been taken over by the Global Village Congress (GVC), which was originally set up and supported by PIPE as part of its effort to encourage direct funding of village initiatives.

iv. Launch of the Global Village Congress (GVC): Events of 22 August 2006: National Press Club, Washington DC and 12 April 2006 Wageningen, The Netherlands: These two events divided by the Atlantic were undertaken by PIPE to launch the Global Village Congress, a non-profit organization registered both in Washington D.C. and The Netherlands. The initiative has helped to further draw worldwide attention to the idea of Bottom-Up Culture of Development. The Bottom-Up Culture seeks to encourage grassroots beneficiaries of development financing to set their own priorities and to be responsible for contributing skills and resources, monitoring services and assessment to evaluate outcome development support by rich countries. "After 50 years and more than a trillion dollars, it is clear that foreign aid has failed," said Adam Lerrick, scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and economics professor at Carnegie Mellon University, because the money has flowed typically to countries with corrupt governments. Linda Docter, a project manager of the Dutch Government Advisory Council on Research for Spatial Planning, Nature and Environment, speaking as the President of the GVC said that "the time is right for new approaches to development cooperation to reach local communities." PIPE's work has grown over the years. However, through United Nations renewed interest in indigenous issues, PIPE remains determined to continue to build a more formidable partnership with the United Nations for progress. Director of the International Labour Organization, Djankou Ndjonkou said, "an organization such as GVC can serve as an effective vehicle for institutions like the International Labour Organization and other United Nations agencies to get needed resources to poor villages." PIPE Looks Back to the Future.
