Views received from Governments in accordance with paragraph 4 (a) of General Assembly resolution 56/24 Q

Cuba

[Original: Spanish]
[9 July 2002]

1. Cuba has been a regular contributor to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, which it considers a useful though incomplete instrument that is part of the overall efforts and aims of the international community to avert international tensions and misunderstandings between States. It is incomplete because weapons of mass destruction should also be included within the scope of the Register, as a transitional measure towards their complete prohibition, which is the only definitive solution to the dangers that such weapons represent.
2. Unfortunately, the notable progress achieved in the fields of chemical and biological disarmament, particularly the former, has not been matched in the field of nuclear disarmament.
3. The Register is a confidence-building tool that should not neglect the legitimate security concerns of States. It is a tool that is complemented by other measures being taken at the national, regional and global levels.
4. For this year, Cuba has already transmitted to the United Nations Secretariat relevant information for the Register, which will be included in the report on the subject that the Secretary-General will shortly be issuing.
5. Cuba is of the view that the voluntary character of the Register should be maintained. Contrary to what it might seem, it is precisely this voluntary character that is the main incentive for countries to continue to provide information to the Register and for this mechanism to continue to be perceived as an important confidence-building tool at the global level.
6. Cuba wishes to reiterate its view, which is shared by a number of other countries, that the voluntary character of the information on national holdings that States provide for the Register should also be maintained until such time as consensus is reached on the issue.
7. It should be recalled that Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations recognizes the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence, which presupposes that States also have the right to acquire the arms that are necessary for their defence. Consequently, legal transfers of arms cannot be prohibited.
8. Cuba not only participates in the Register, but also voluntarily implements confidence-building measures that have included, inter alia, visits by military personnel from several countries, including the United States of America, to various military installations in Cuba. Also, in September 2001, representatives of the International Campaign to Ban Landmines visited the zone controlled by Cuba that adjoins the naval base at Guantánamo Bay and were able to see for themselves the control measures that the Cuban Government has implemented there.

9. In addition, scientists and eminent persons from all over the world, many of them from the United States of America, have visited Cuba's biotechnology centres and were able to see for themselves the absolutely peaceful nature of our programmes in this field.

10. There is no doubt that the adoption of resolution 46/36 L by the General Assembly marks a high point in the efforts of the international community to promote confidence-building measures. However, the Register should not be a static process; it must be developed and for that it is essential not only to make it universal but also to continue to study the experience of its operation and to continue to seek the most effective ways of contributing to its further development.

11. In this connection, Cuba welcomes the efforts made by the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts and in discharge of the mandate given by the General Assembly, to review the operation and future development of the Register.

12. Cuba hopes that the group of governmental experts to be convened in 2003, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 56/24 Q of 29 November 2001, will continue the earlier studies and go forward on the basis of the information and views given by States.

13. It is important to underscore the need for the report to be submitted by the Secretary-General, in discharge of the mandate given in resolution 56/24 Q, to be made available to States for their consideration sufficiently in advance so that it can be carefully reviewed before it is discussed.
